ONTARIO LEGISLATURE

Looking back from a ten days' perspective upon the proceedings of the 1924 session o fthe Legislature, the first under the Ferguson Government, the business of the House pales into significance as compared to the tremendous importance from a public standpoint of what transpired before the Public Accounts Committee.

Ontario's shame for her public life is perhaps accentuated because the Government investigators left an apparently dirty floor still unswept, in failing to bring before the searchlight of public gaze the full facts of the disposal of the mysterious $25,000 check, which was drawn to cash by the Home Bank authorities exactly at the time of the 1919 election.

What little the public heard about the disposition of the $25,000, which was part of profits on a Conservative Government bond transaction, it owes to the efforts of W. E. N. Sinclair, K.C., Liberal leader. After listening patiently for three weeks to the sins of the Drury Government and its ministry, as elicited from witnesses by Government examiners, suddenly, just before the wind-up of the committee, Mr. Sinclair moved for the appearance before the committee of J. C. Whittaker, Supervisor of the Home Bank, M. J. Haney, former President of the Bank, Assistant Treasurer, Charles A. Matthews, former Assistant Treasurer Sproule, L. C. Mason, and others who might be able to tell the committee about the $25,000.

Even with the one witness which the committee was able to get for Mr. Sinclair, the result was startling. Mr. Whittaker, who previously had not thrown light on the disposition of the $25,000, in cash which the former Home Bank Manager, J. Cooper Mason, drew, said he remembered that Mason told him the money was going up to the Parliament Building by M. J. Haney. That was brand new evidence for the committee and the intensity of interest was evidenced by the broadside of questions with which Mr. Whittaker was instantly deluged by Liberal and Conservative examiners.

It was also a fact that there was no chance to cross-examine Mr. Haney on account of his illness and Mr. Clarkson was also called to give statement in regard to Mr. Haney, and it should be remembered that Mr. McGarry swore that he and Mr. Mason handled the loan of $1,000,000 from which the rake-off came. It is also a fact that when Mr. McGarry left office in 1919 the Deposit in the Bank was $3,500,000. With that startling statement of intention to send $25,000 to the Parliament Buildings before the committee the Liberal and Conservative questioners started out on different lines of attack. Liberal members secured from Mr. Whittaker a recollection that he had seen the bank's car with Mr. Haney in it, start for the Parliament Buildings, and Conservative examiners secured a statement that he now thought Manager Mason's explanation of the withdrawal of $25,000 of bank funds to be a "blind."

The committee ceased operations with that $25,000 matter hanging in the air, just at that point where Liberal members had managed to bring it. Assistant Treasurer Matthews was not brought forward although Liberal members almost daily, particularly Messrs. Sinclair, Belanger and Fisher, made pointed inquiries. Mr. Haney, who was said to have brought the money to the Buildings was ill, but made a bedside declaration that he never handled the $25,000.

It is to be remembered that the bulk of the Government's delvings before the committee into Home Bank payments had to do with only $15,000 of $57,400 of rake-offs which the bank books show to have been made on bank profits on provincial transactions. Former Treasurer T. W. McGarry swore positively before committee that not a cent of it reached him.

W[illegible]
[illegible] ON HORSE BACK

Miss Gwendolen (Gwen) Lazier, of the city of Belleville, Ontario, has been selected as the courier to carry on [illegible] an invitation from His Worship Mayor W. C. Mikel, [illegible] of the city of Belleville, to the President of United States at Washington, to attend the celebration of the 140th anniversary of the settlement of Upper Canada, which commences June 16th next at the city of Belleville.

The Courier started from Belleville, Ontario, on the 24th of April for a ride of over 800 miles, and the course to be taken by the courier after leaving Belleville, will be through Napanee and Kingston, Ontario, crossing at Cape Vincent, N.Y., passing through Watertown, Utica, Schenectady, Albany, Rensselaer, Rhinebeck, Poughkeepsie, Peekskill, Yonkers, New York City, Newark, New Brunswick, Trenton, Bustleton, Philadelphia, Wilmington, Elktown, Baltimore, Laurel, Washington and intervening towns. The Mayors of these places have offered to extend the courtesy and hospitality to the courier so common in old pioneer days.

The Laziers are U. E. Loyalists from New York State and came over to Canada in 1784, when it was a wilderness after the war. The family were originally Huguenots who left France and took up residence in New York, when it was a British Colony. The courier's grand uncle, Lt. Col. S. S. Lazier, has been Master of the Supreme Court at Belleville for over 50 years, and on [illegible] grand uncle was the late [illegible] Thomas A. Lazier. An[illegible] ancestor, the late Asa [illegible] operated the first stage [illegible] from the "Carrying Place" [illegible] the Bay of Quinte and Lake Ontario, to the Village of York (now Toronto). Her grandfather, on her mother's side, the late Fred R. Lingham, was of English descent and took part in the Jameson Raid in South Africa and was condemned by the late President Kruger of the Transvaal, to be put to death, but by the influence of friends and [illegible] of a fine of $[illegible] [illegible] pioneer. [illegible] the great advancement that has been made in the last 140 years. The week commencing June 6th is the time fixed for the celebration, because it was on June 16th, 1784, that the principal body of Loyalists landed in the native forests of the Bay of Quinte District.

Miss Gwendolen Lazier arrived in Napanee on Friday evening and left for Kingston on Saturday morning. Miss Lazier attracted considerable attention on Saturday morning when leaving town on her journey. Miss Lazier was entertained by Miss Georgie Robinson while in Napanee.

RAMSAY MacDONALD.

England's drink bill, notwithstanding her unemployment, is £7, 9s per head of the population! No wonder Ramsay Macdonald said, when appealed to to oppose a Local Option Bill, on the ground that the rich man can have his wine-cellar:—

"If the rich want to keep the road open to their own loss, that is their affair. No; democracy ought not to say because one class has such and such a right, all classes ought to claim the same right.' It is not worth it. Let us see to it that the rights the Democracy claim: that the rights the working classes claim, are rights worth having, and not rights that come with disease and canker and vice in their train. The right to go wrong, to go down, to go astray—well we will make a present of these rights to anyone who wants them.

[illegible] CLINIC.

The [illegible] Order is instituting a new departure in its activities. Beginning on May 1st, and from then on every Thursday, from 2 o'clock until 4 in the afternoon, a [illegible] clinic will be conducted.

What this means is this. In the Council Chamber on every Thursday from 2 to 4 p.m., the Nurse will be in attendance to examine any children that are brought there. They must be under school age. Their weight will be taken, an examination made, and advice and instruction tendered on the basis of the facts gained from the examination. This record will be kept and advice given weekly, or as frequently as necessary, in order to keep the child up to standard in respect to health.

A great many people do not know whether their children are perfectly healthy or not. So long as they seem healthy all is well. But all may not be well, and a scientific examination should be made systematically. For this purpose the clinic is to be operated. It is hoped the town will make full use of its service. It is free.

In the Council Chamber every Thursday, from 2 until 4 p.m.

One of the best spring tonics and blood purifiers we know of is Burdock and Sarsaparilla with Potassium Iodide. Everyone needs just such a treatment after the winter. Sold in $1.00 bottles at WALLACE'S.

Miss Haig returned to her home at Gananoque for the Easter holidays.

Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Parrott left here on Thursday for Kingston, en route for their new home in Herkimer, N.Y.

Miss Hazel Reid spent her vacation under the parental roof.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Smith attended the funeral of the late Walter Smith, Westbrook, on Monday morning last.

The farmers around here are patiently waiting for warm, dry weather to start spring work.

The demand for delicious [illegible] Candy grows week by week. The many imitations on the market of this delicious confection serve but to [illegible] the demand for this justly [illegible] candy. A fresh shipment arrives each week at WALLACE'S, 60c. the pound.

RIVERSIDE CEMETERY.

It is sometimes said that the living soon forget the dead. That is a superficial observation made out of lack of real experience of the facts. A survey of the time and money that is spent on the upkeep of the cemeteries in the country would show a very substantial sum each year spent on the cities of the dead. Napanee is fortunate in its cemeteries. For over sixty years Riverside Cemetery has been cared for and tended by the owners, who do so solely for the interest they have in the burial grounds. It may not be known to the general public that the Cemetery Company consists of the lot owners. No dividends are ever paid; all moneys are spent on the grounds themselves.

In the last eight years Riverside has made vast improvements. Hydro power runs a water pump, which is capable of keeping seven sprays going all day. Roads have consistently been rebuilt and opened up, shrubs have been set out and drainage taken care of by the most up-to-date methods.

The one drawback to the present situation is the difficulty which pedestrians have in reaching the cemetery. Particularly at this time of the year, when the roads are so muddy, it is almost impossible to reach there on foot. As it appears to an outside observer this is a matter which ought to be remedied at once. We spend a great deal of money each year on the roads of the town. These roads are used for the most part by the motorists. We have, as well, a splendid system of sidewalks within the town. But the approach to the cemetery seems to have been neglected. It would be money well spent for the council this year to make the approach to Riverside as complete as other walks in the town limits.

Blackleg in cattle can be prevented! Once the disease sets in, it is absolutely incurable. The thing to do is to vaccinate your herd before any symptoms appear. Instist on Parke Davis & Co. fresh vaccine in sealed tubes of ten pellets, $1.00 tube at WALLACE'S.

The report was adopted.

The M. B. Mills Co., in a communication asked the council to postpone blasing on the Mill street sewer, until the egg hatching season was pretty well over, as considerable financial loss would be incurred by the heavy blasting.

The matter was referred to the Streets Committee and Mr. Mills was given to understand that this matter would receive every consideration.

Looking back from a ten days' perspective upon the proceedings of the 1924 session of the Legislature, the first under the Ferguson Government, the business of the House pales into significance as compared to the tremendous importance from a public standpoint of what transpired before the Public Accounts Committee.

WILL RIDE 600 MILES ON HORSE BACK

Miss Gwendolen (Gwen.) Lazier, of the city of Belleville, Ontario, has been selected as the courier to carry on horse-back an invitation from His Worship Mayor W. C. Mikel, K.C., of the city of Belleville, to the President of United States at Washington, to attend the celebration of the 140th anniversary of the settlement of Upper Canada, which commences June 16th next at the city of Belleville.

The Courier started from Belleville, Ontario, on the 24th of April for a ride of over 600 miles, and the course to be taken by the courier after leaving Belleville, will be through Napanee and Kingston, Ontario, crossing at Cape Vincent, N.Y., passing through Watertown, Utica, Schenectady, Albany, Rensselaer, Rhinebeck, Poughkeepsie, Peekskill, Yonkers, New York City, Newark, New Brunswick, Trenton, Bustleton, Philadelphia, Wilmington, Elktown, Baltimore, Laurel, Washington and intervening towns. The Mayors of these places have offered to extend the courtesy and hospitality to the courier so common in old pioneer days.

The Laziers are U. E. Loyalists from New York State and came over to Canada in 1784, when it was a wilderness after the war. The family were originally Huguenots who left France and took up residence in New York, when it was a British Colony. The courier's grand uncle, Lt. Col. S. S. Lazier, has been Master of the Supreme Court at Belleville for over 50 years, and another grand uncle was the late Judge Thomas A. Lazier. Another ancestor, the late Asa Weller, operated the first stage route from the "Carrying Place" between the Bay of Quinte and Lake Ontario, to the Village of York (now Toronto). Her grandfather, on her mother's side, the late Fred R. Lingham, was of English descent and took part in the Jameson Raid in South Africa and was condemned by the late President Kruger of the Transvaal, to be put to death, but by the influence of friends and on payment of a fine of $10,000, was released.

The courier is 19 years of age, was educated in Bishop Strachan School, Toronto, is a good rider and an all round athlete.

BABY CLINIC.

The Victorian Order is instituting a new departure in its activities. Beginning on May 1st, and from then on every Thursday, from 2 o'clock until 4 in the afternoon, the clinic will be conducted.

What that means is this. In the Council Chamber on every Thursday from 2 to 4 p.m., the Nurse will be in attendance to examine any children that are brought there. They must be under school age. Their weight will be taken, an examination made, and advice and instruction tendered on the basis of the facts gained from the examination. This record will be kept and advice given weekly, or as frequently as necessary, in order to keep the child up to standard in respect to health.

A great many people do not know whether their children are perfectly healthy or not. So long as they seem healthy all is well. But all may not be well, and a scientific examination should be made systematically. For this purpose the clinic is to be operated. It is hoped the town will make full use of its service. It is free.

In the Council Chamber every Thursday, from 2 until 4 p.m.

POTATO INSPECTION AND CERTIFICATION

(Experimental Farms Note.)

Arrangements have been made for the continuation of potato inspection and certification during the coming season, and forms of application have already been forwarded to all potato growers whose fields were inspected last year. These forms are returnable up to July 1st, so that there is still ample time for any other growers who may desire to submit their fields for inspection to write for a form and secure any particulars they may desire in respect to the work. Letters (postage free) should be addressed to the Dominion Botanist, Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, who will see that every attention is paid to requests for forms and additional information. He will arrange for the carrying out of inspections at the appropriate time during the season.

Two field inspections will as usual be made, the first as near as possible to the blossoming period, and the second some three or four weeks later.

The standard for the field inspection will be the same as that applied last year, and any fields, as the result of the two inspections, found to measure up to this standard, will be considered eligible for certification, subject to an inspection of the tubers after harvest and the grading out of any which may appear undesirable for seed purposes.

'TO SMOKE OR NOT TO SMOKE'

THAT is the question which has been causing deep thought and raising piles of reports and correspondence among Canadian Pacific officials who have to do with the operation of observation cars on Trans-Continental trains during the last few months. At various times previous to the war, smoking in these cars was permitted, sometimes only for cigars and cigarettes and then again even for the odorous pipe itself. During the war smoking was a luxury which many were willing to forego, and the observation cars were free from tobacco, but after the war the demand for permission to smoke in these favored precincts increased to a noticeable degree, the requests coming not only from men but from ladies, as the cigarette habit has undoubtedly grown among the fair sex. The pressure of this public opinion became so pronounced that it was decided to experiment once more and to allow smoking in this part of the train, although it was admitted that the trains carrying such cars had also sleeping cars each with its smoking compartment. Public opinion, however, is a fickle thing, and the demand has grown to exclude the human volcanoes from these cars. Some of those who originally urged the granting of the permission are now requesting its withdrawal, evidently finding that the practise is not quite so delightful as the theory of perfect freedom. In its desire to give the greatest satisfaction to as many as possible, the Canadian Pacific has therefore decided to conclude the experiment for the time being and, commencing April 15th, to request the smokers to enjoy the society of Lady Nicotine in the smoking compartments and smoking cars expressly provided for the purpose.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

BY REV. W. H. GRIFFITH THOMAS, D.D.

Sunday, May 4: The Assyrian Exile of Israel (II Kings, 11-27).

This lesson records the end of what might have been a promising and prosperous enterprise—the founding of the Northern Kingdom of Israel, which commenced under Divine instructions and would have been continued with the Divine blessing if only the leaders and people had been true to God. It will be useful to look at the entire story of the kingdom, so as to be able to note and understand the cause of its downfall.

I.—The Course of the History.

Limiting our attention to the Northern Kingdom, we see three periods of its history:

(1) From Jeroboam to Omri (I Kings, 12:1-16:28). Sixty years; six kings.

(2) From Ahab to Jehoahaz (I. Kings, 16:29-2; Kings 11:20. Eighty years; five kings.

(3) From Joash to Hoshea (II Kings, 12-17). One hundred and twenty years; eight kings.

In this period of about 260 years there were nineteen kings, not one of whom was good. The kingdom was far larger and more fertile than the Southern Kingdom of Juda, and the start was full of promise. But they began wrong, by neglecting what was right, and, though God sent them prophets to warn them and win them from evil, there was a steady deterioration from the first, and at length there came a spirit of wilfulness that entirely set God aside. Read carefully the summary in II Kings 17.

II.—The Condition of the People.

One word marks the life of the nation all through failure. This sad fact should be studied in various ways.

1. Failure in national life. They were without the Divine blessing, and became engrossed in the practice and sin of idolatry. Why was idolatry so powerful? What was in it that made it so attractive to the people? Perhaps four things will explain this: (1) It appealed to the desire for the material things of life in its association with greed and luxury. (2) It was attractive because it was closely connected with sensuality. (3) It afforded a visible object of worship, and this was much easier than a worship that was concerned with the invisible and spiritual. (4) It was followed by the King and the leaders, and thus the influence of the chief personages would be powerful in leading many to adopt and practice it.

2. Failure in national vocation. There was no witness for God. Prophets were raised up by God to remind them of their duty, but all to no effect.

3. Failure in national fellowship with God. There was no covenant on which they could depend, and the action of Jeroboam (I Kings 12) in establishing new centres of worship, new festivals and a new priesthood was a fatal step which led to the dow[illegible] sure and certain steps.

III.—The Cause of the Trouble.

It is a well-known principle that every effect must have its sufficient cause, and we find this illustrated in every department of life. In the physical world disease is the effect of a neglect of some natural law. In the intellectual world we see how the use or the non-use of the mind will result in success or failure. It is exactly the same with things moral and spiritual. Sin always brings its sad and terrible effects. The sin of unfaithfulness in Solomon was followed by the sin of schism in Rehoboam, and the sin of idolatry in Jeroboam. Then came such features as Israel's bad government, its weaknesses as a military force, and the corresponding strength of Assyria. But the Bible traces everything up to its first cause, departure from God. The word "apostasy" means wilful departure from God, and this was at the root of all the trouble of Israel.

IV.—The Lesson For Us.

As we trace the history of Israel from its commencement to its close we cannot fail to observe some very solemn truths for individual and for corporate life.

1. Nothing happens by chance or by some wonderful "magic." There is a cause somewhere. The boy who is idle today is sure to be ignorant tomorrow. The girl who will not practice the piano today will live to regret her inability to play it when she is a woman. The one who gives way to passion may easily find herself guilty of even murder some day. A youth who is careless of truth may discover himself to be a liar later on. The man who is fond of the social glass may become a drunkard some day. The contrary is also true. Watchfulness now will tend to greater understanding and clearness in the future. Persistence in right today will lay the foundation of strong character. Faithfulness develops capacity, and resistance to things doubtful will do much to make the man or woman rocklike by and by.

There is nothing more insidious, more certain or more deplorable than the progressive development of evil. It begins very simply, and sometimes in secret. It gradually gets contrl over the voice of conscience. It then proceeds to sho witself in carelessness and boldness of conduct. It then becomes common and general among people, so that its familiarity causes no concern. At length it becomes utterly reckless of the claims of God or the rights of our fellow-men. Thus we see the great law of cause and effect, and the way in which, like a boulder pushed down a hill, sin gathers momentum at every point until it reaches its end in the judgment of God.

But it is also an encouragem to know that the same law of cause and effect is at work in the sphere of good. Not only does evil persist to the third and fourth generation, but good always goes farther, and persists to thousands (of generations), as the second commandment, when studies in its two places (Exodus 20:5, 6; Deut 5:9, 10), suggests. It is the same with such graces as love, joy and peace. They are the result of fulfilling conditions. Joy comes in believing; love in serving, and peace in obeying. And so if we fulfill causes God will produce the effects.

2. The call is therefore clear to make God real and always put Him first. As ideas and feelings go to form character, so if our ideas of God are right and true they will keep everything straight. Israel "followed vanity and became vain," and what we fill our souls with will ruin our lives. Thus the call is clear to let God have the first place in our lives, and then "the work of righteousness will be peace, and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance forever."

Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget.

ON PARLIAMENT HILL

BY A MEMBER OF THE PARLIAMENTARY PRESS GALLERY.

Ottawa, April 19th, 1924—Parliament adjourned for the Easter recess on April 16, after completion of the first heat of the Budget debate. The debate will probably continue for a week or so, when Parliament meets on the 24th, but the first two days of the debate have hardly been up to expectations, from the Conservative opposition standpoint, at least. It has been much more lackadaisacal than might have been expected from advance notices as to the opposition attack on the Robb-King tariff reduction proposals.

From the outset, all members of Parliament recognized that the Budget proposals were of vital significance; that they definitely marked the advent of a new era in fiscal policy; that they brought the tariff into the lists as to the supreme issue between the "manufacturers" and the consumers-tariff parties" at the next general election two years hence. Under these circumstances therefore, a slashing fight from the outset might have been expected in the Commons from the Conservative benches.

A MILD ONSLAUGHT.

But no. There was no real fight. Sir Henry Drayton, former Finance Minister, led off for the Conservative protectionists. But it was a mild onslaught. He covered much ground, dealing both with the financial record and the tariff proposals of the government. He questioned Mr. Robb's reduction of the National debt by thirty millions, claiming that the bond issue of fifty millions for the National Railways (of which about one-third still remains unexpended) should be regarded as a debt increase, although in regard to this the minister of Railways noted that at least a very considerable part of the bond issue was devoted to capital expenditures, on permanent betterments. Sir Henry dealt rather gingerly with the real issue, namely, that of tariff reductions and their significance. His main thesis was that a high tariff was necessary to preserve Canadian industry in the face of American and European competition, and that the farmers themselves deserved a higher protection against competition, from the Conservative side. For the first big gun opening the attack on the Liberal budget it was decidedly unimpressive, a fact admitted privately by many of those seated behind Mr. Meighen's first lieutenant.

ANOTHER RECORD MAJORITY.

Where Sir Henry fell short of expectations others of his party who followed in the debate also failed to put across any real live bombs, and unless a more concentrated and effective attack is forthcoming after the Easter adjournment, the country will take a comparatively mild interest in the subsequent debate, knowing that the vote in any case is a foregone conclusion with a government majority, backed by the whole progressive vote, equal probably to the record majority of 121 secured in the division on the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the Throne.

THE MINISTERIAL REPLY

From the government side, the two main contributions came from Honourable Charles Stewart Minister of the Interior, and Honourable J. E. Sinclair, Minister without portfolio, the former speaking for Western Canada and the latter for the Maritimes Provinces. Mr. Stewart emphasized the fact that the tariff reductions were designed to help the basic industries of the country—agriculture, dairying, mining, lumbering and fishing thereby stimulating the purchasing power of the whole people, and in consequence benefitting the manufacturers themselves. "Despite the lamentations of the Conservative Party," he declared, "telegrams are pouring in from all over Canada congratulating the Government. There is now a feeling that the government is being conducted for the many and not for the select few." Honourable Mr. Sinclair devoted a considerable part of his argument to refuting the theory advanced by Sir Henry Drayton that what the farmers of Canada wanted was protection. He quoted comprehensive statistics showing that of the total of ninety-seven million dollars worth of food products imported into Canada last year, seventy-five million dollars worth were of a kind not produced in Canada at all; while twenty-three million dollars worth were composed largely of seasonable imports such as fruits, fresh vegetables, etc., imported at a time when Canadian farmers themselves had none of these products to sell. To impose a duty on these imports, he maintained, would simply result in increasing the price to the consumers without helping the Canadian grower at all. "If we impose," he said, "further duties on these commodities we don't benefit our farmers, we simply make our artisans and labourers pay more for articles of food which they must buy during the season of low domestic production, and we therefore increase their cost of living."

PROGRESSIVES SUPPORT GOVERNMENT.

From the Progressive side of the House, J. Fred Johnson, chief whip, heartily congratulated the Government on its move in the right direction towards the reestablishment on a sound footing of the basic industries of the Dominion.

In brief, the first round in the debate has amply confirmed first day impressions of the Budget, namely, that it struck a responsive chord in the hearts of the mass of the Canadian people looking for taxation reduction and a lowering of the tariff impositions on the basic implements of production. Probably no one realizes this more keenly than Mr. Meighen, who is shrewd enough to read public opinion, and will probably abandon the pre-budget intention of a long fighting debate.

INCOME TAX REDUCTIONS.

Amendments to the Budget, promised by Mr. Robb, whereby exemption for children under the income war tax Act is increased from three hundred dollars to five hundred dollars per child will be welcomed with approval in all parts of Canada. This further cut in taxation for the present fiscal year will add a very considerable amount to the cut of twenty-four millions already announced by Mr. Robb. The total taxation cut will average about three dollars per head or about fifteen dollars for each family of five.

Right Honourable W. S. Fielding has returned to Ottawa after a month at Atlantic City. The veteran minister is feeling much improved in health, but it is hardly probable that he will be able to take any active part in the Commons this session.

INDUSTRIES GREW DURING PAST YEAR

NEW PLANTS ALONG NATIONAL RAILWAYS WILL EMPLOY 5000 HANDS.

A clear indication of the important part which a great steam transportation system plays in the industrial life of a nation is to be found by an analysis of the annual report submitted to Mr. J. E. Dalrymple, Traffic Vice-President, by Mr. W. P. Fitzsimons, Manager of the Industrial Department of the Canadian National Railways. This report covers that portion of Canada east of Fort William, served by the National Railways, and it shows such a steady growth in the establishment of new industries and the development of old ones, that there is every reason to suppose that the barometer of business in Canada is pointing to "Fair."

During the past year, there located along the lines of the Canadian National Railways, east of Fort William, new industries that will employ approximately 5000 hands. They cover a wide diversity of activities in the manufacturing and industrial field, some of the commodities to be manufactured being automobile accessories, gasoline, pulp, paper, lumber, oil, casters, hosiery, textiles, excelsior, confectionery, soda fountain supplies, gloves, candied fruits, water pumps, ivory piano keys, broom handles, scales, clocks, chemicals, drugs, iron and steel products, electrical appliances, clothes hangers, cheese and butter boxes.

Similar activity was shown by plants of recent or long standing. Extensions to plants in the same area during 1923 provided for an increased production that made necessary the employment of 960 more hands. These plants also represent a wide divergence of endeavor, some of the manufactured commodities represented being, cordage, steel, electrical supplies, soap, explosives, linoleum, screws, radiators, furniture and automobiles.

Raining Cats and Dogs.

No country in the world is richer in mythology and legendary lore than Norway. The people are naturally superstitious and many of the old people claim the gift of second sight. Some of the strange Norwegian legends deal with cats and dogs and the weather. As the cat represented the rain, the dog was supposed to be the wind that accompanied the rain. Therefore, to "rain cats and dogs" means to rain and blow. The dog and wolf were attendants upon Odin, the storm god. In old German prints, wind is represented by the head of a dog or a wolf from which issue great blasts. English sailors still say that a rain comes when the ship's cat is unusually frisky. Witches were believed to assume the form of cats and ride upon the storm.

City of Many Lakes.

A veritable city of lakes is Winter Haven, Florida. The town, which has a population of some 2,000, is entirely surrounded by fresh water bodies, large and small, and the avenues of escape into the country are few. If Winter Haven should ever get its army of lakes hooked up with canals, an elaborate system of navigation charts would be required to avoid confusion, and the annoying mistake of getting into the wrong channel.

Newfoundland's National Anthem.

Like every other British Dominion, Newfoundland has the National Anthem of the Empire, "God Save the King." It also has a national anthem of its own, written almost half a century ago by William Swansborough, a schoolmaster of a port known as Topsail. He was a man possessing considerable gift for versification and became known as "the poet of Newfoundland." The first two verses of his National anthem, written in 1871, are:

God bless this sea-girt Isle!
May peace and plenty smile
On every hand.
The honest fisher bless.
To sealers give success,
And when they're in distress
Bring safe to land.

The farmer and his stock,
The builder in his dock,
Bless all that's theirs.
Give merchants honest gain,
May Portugal and Spain,
And other ports, remain
Good customers.

King Tut's Telephone

QUITE naturally, effective work by the Howard Carter party at the tomb of King Tutankhamen in the valley of the Kings, was out of the question without the aid of the telephone. The problem of an operator was solved by arranging for the services of the turbaned gentleman shown on the left. The contrast between him and the alert, intelligent young lady of the type we know so well, is striking, but it is averred that, under the conditions imposed by the excavators, the Egyptian filled the bill very well.

BETTING IN ENGLAND.

Prevails to Greater Extent Than In Any Other Country.

It has been estimated by a House of Commons committee which recently reported upon the prevelence of betting in England that an annual sum of $25,000,000 might be secured for the public treasury by taxing bookmakers. The committe said that to impose such a tax was practicable, built did not recommend it, being aware of the strong opposition that would be roused against the proposal, especially from the Nonconformists, whose idea is that to impose the tax would be tantamount to the Government going into partnership with the bookmakers. The same argument has been used occasionally with regard to the tax upon liquor licenses, but the public conscience has not proved so squeamish. Betting upon horse races prevails in England to a far greater extent than in any other country in the world, despite the fact that the law forbids all betting. Yet at race tracks the betting is not only open, but the bookmakers are protected by the police. Bookmakers advertise in the newspapers, but the betting transactions, of which there are many thousands a day, are supposed to be relayed to their offices in Scotland, thus evading the law. While gambling debts are not collectable in court the law regards an effort to swindle a bookmaker by means of betting as a crime, and not long ago a highly connected sportsman was convicted of the offence. Except for the small better, the law against betting in England to-day is a dead letter.

It is doubtful if the masses of the people want it to be anything else. That it is permitted on race tracks, and that the highest people in the land as well as the lowest make occasional, if not regular, bets is an indication of what succeeding governments have thought of the suggestion that the law ought to be enforced. But the poor man is likely to be arrested at any moment if he bets away from the race tracks, and it is only rarely that the poor man sees a race track. Nor are the big bookmakers proceeded against. Only the small fry are bothered by the police. As often as not they are proprietors of public houses, and conviction may mean the suspension of the license which may entail ruin. The committee notes this fact, but does not suggest that the laws should not be invoked in these cases. The London Herald, organ of Labor, while it condemns betting, and the misery that often accompanies it, says: "It is foolish to think that we can abolish the betting evil until we have altered the social conditions out of which it grows." The truth seems to be that it grows not so much out of social conditions as out of human nature. To risk a little to gain a great deal may be immoral, but it is an instinct almost universal.

Remembered His Alma Mater.

Prof. McEachran of Ormstown, Que., has presented to his Alma Mater, the Royal (Dick) Veterinary College, Edingburgh, a portrait of its founder William Dick. The presentation was made at the centenary celebrations which were held recently. Sir John MacFayden, principal of the Royal Veterinary College, London, said that Prof. McEachran was a student at the college more than 50 years ago. After receiving his diploma he came to Canada and founded a college in Montreal. Dr. McEachran's college was subsequently affiliated with McGill University.

Old Tree's Secret.

An old tree's secret was revealed when an old laurel was removed from near Furness Abbey, Lancashire, Eng., and a small stone-built chamber or well was discovered. In the bottom of this there were found an old gold watch, a beautiful figured wine-glass, and also some ancient clay pipes. The watch is said to be valuable. How the stone chamber and its contents came there is unknown.

Getting a Place Art, Literature and Exploration.

Iceland is getting a place on the Canadian map, in the diverse fields of exploration, art and literature. Stefansson, the Manitoban of Icelandic blood, has been known for years for his explorations in the Arctic regions, a work which he abandoned a few days ago by announcement from California. His services in charting new lands and waters and in making the world acquainted with the riches he had observed have given him a place of first rank among Canadians pioneering in the wilderness.

Two other Canadian Icelanders are cited by Austin Bothwell, writing in the Literary Digest International Book Review. "Emile Walters," Mr. Bothwell writes, "born in Winnipeg of icelandic parents, has at the early age of thirty made an international reputation as an artist. His 'Spring Blossoms' is hung in the Art Institute of Chicago."

The other contributor to the honor of the race is Mrs. Laura Goodman Salverson, who was in childhood a playmate of Emile Walters, and who has attracted high praise in recent months by her novel, "The Viking Heart." This story, we are told, was accepted by the publishers after seeing the first 18,000 words. "It was written in three months, and it has the virtues springing from the concentrated ardor of its making, a passionate sincerity, a glow, a verve."

"The Viking Heart" is drawn from the racial story of the author herself. It tells in moving style the experiences of some of the Icelandic families who came to Canada in 1872 and settled on the broad plains of Manitoba and have grown into prosperous and estimable citizens. Touching some of the characters and incidents, Mr. Bothwell writes:

Borga is a magnificent figure; she would have been a fit bride for a Viking. She is the protagonist in the central action which the original name of the story, "The Price of Country," epitomizes. Canada to her is but a farm and a house thereon, won by heartbreaking toil, until her brilliant young surgeon son Thor gives his life to save another's in the mud of Paschendaele. How the bitterness in her heart is softened is told in moving fashion. It is the finest bit of writing in any Canadian novel—except, perhaps, the chapter telling of the birth of Thor—in its restraint and in the insight into the human heart which it displays. The scenes where Bjorn sobs out his grief, where Borga enters her son's room to come out and take up the common task once more—these are unforgettable.

And then there is Finna—or, when she is in her best dress, Mrs. Johnson—she is a most amusing, a most lovable character, with her quaint sayings, her downright candor and sterling kindness. The characters live; one feels one knows them well. They talk as people do talk, they act as people do act. Yet the story is not a direct transcript from life; its realism is "unfailingly poetic." It illustrates admirably Joseph Conrad's fine definition of a novel as "a conviction of our fellowmen's existence, strong enough to take upon itself a form of imagined life clearer than reality."

A Great British Merchant.

The Right Hon. Sir James Lyle Mackay, first Baron Inchcape, of Strathnavar, G.C.M.G., K.C.S.I., K.C. I.E., who has just been created a viscount is famous as one of the foremost merchants of Britain, and is also well-known for his Governmental work, particularly in connection with India, which accounts for his membership in both Indian orders of knighthood.

Lord Inchcape is senior partner in Mackinnon, Mackenzie and Co., and Macneill and Co., Calcutta, and Gray, Dawes and Co., and Macneill and Co., London; a director of the Suez Canal Co., chairman of the P. and O. and British India Steam Navigation Companies; director of the National Provincial Bank of England, and the Atlas Assurance Co., Ltd.; and chairman of the P. and O. Banking Corporation, Ltd.

He has occupied important Government positions in India on various occasions, and has repeatedly been a member of Government committees of investigation concerning commercial matters, as well as having served on numerous diplomatic missions. He was created a peer in 1911, receiving his knightly honors at an earlier date.

Lord Inchcape was born at Arbroath, Forfarshire, Scotland, on September 11, 1852, and received his education at Arbroath and Elgin. He married in 1883, Jane Patterson, daughter of James Shanks, of Rosely, Arbroath, and has one son and four daughters.

Here and There

Commencing April 15th, the Canadian Pacific Railway, having in mind the expressed wishes of the majority of its patrons, has decided to revert to the custom of permitting no smoking in observation cars of its transcontinental trains.

The production of steel ingots and castings in Canada during the month of February amounted to 70,953 tons, an advance of 72 per cent over the 41,309 tons produced in January. The increase was almost wholly accounted for by the rise in the quantity of open-hearth basic steel ingots made for the use of producers.

Canadian farm products exported to the United States during February totalled $2,440,203, an increase of $961,579 over February last year, according to a report published by the Bureau of Statistics. Wheat exports to the United States were valued at $101,714 in February, as against $25,157 in February of the previous year.

Under the agreement with the Imperial Government under the Empire Settlement Act, Canada, spent $39,657 in assisted passages for some 2,653 British immigrants in the fiscal year just closed. In the past four years the Dominion Government has spent nearly $1,500,000 in promoting immigration from Great Britain to Canada.

By arrangements made by Hon. George Headley, Minister of Agriculture, a trial shipment of cows and steers will be made in the near future to Japan for the purpose of testing out the possibilities of a market for Alberta's livestock in that country. It is also the purpose of the department to send with the shipment a qualified investigator who will look into the potentialities of a market for all Albertan farm products.

For the first time in the past two or three years the Saskatchewan Co-operative Creameries Limited is shipping butter in carload lots direct to the cities of the United States. A carload shipment was recently made from Saskatoon to Philadelphia. Two carloads were also shipped to Chicago, where they realized good prices. Each car contained between 25,000 and 30,000 pounds of Saskatchewan butter.

Speaking at Quebec recently, E. W. Beatty, President of the Canadian Pacific Railway, summarized the magnitude of the operations of the Company. It has 15,000 miles of railway in Canada and controls 5,102 miles in the United States. It owns and operates telegraph and express systems, 13 hotels, 16 bungalow camps and rest houses, and has in commission on the Atlantic and Pacific, Canadian lakes and the British Columbia coast, 81 ships aggregating approximately 450,000 gross tons. Its personnel varies in numbers with business conditions from 65,000 to 100,000 employees in all branches of the service.

What must constitute a record in the rapid handling of an important consignment from the Orient was established recently by the Canadian Pacific Railway when shipping a quantity of silk from Yokohama to New York. The consignment, which was the largest forwarded from Asia since the recent slump in the silk market, left Yokohama on March 22nd on the Canadian Pacific steamer "Empress of Asia." Specially stowed for prompt discharge on arrival at Vancouver, the shipment was so rapidly transferred to the waiting train that only 13½ minutes per car lapsed between the docking of the ship and the departure of the fast freight and delivery was made at New York at midnight April 4th, the through time from Yokohama to New York being but 13 days, 8 hours and 13 minutes calendar time.

Canadian Products for N. Africa.

Looking far afield for trade the Department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa, has been directing attention to the market for Canadian products in Northern Africa. This is being done by means of reports by Mr. W. McL. Clarke, Canadian Government Trade Commissioner, who has visited Tunisia, Algeria and Morocco, which form a large part of Northern Africa bordering on the Mediterranean Sea.

French and Spanish influence predominates in these countries; in fact, Algeria is a French possession, and for government purposes a part of France. The European population of these three countries numbers about one million.

In a recent letter the Canadian Trade Commissioner discusses the possibilities of these countries as a market for footwear. At present the foot attire of these million of Europeans comes principally from France, which supplies 40 per cent. of the demand of Europeans and natives. Some comes from England and Spain, and a small quantity from the United States. As for Canadian shoes, they would sell provided they could compete in price "and could catch the fancy of the North African buyers."

One paragraph of the commissioner's report that possesses general interest is that describing the customs of these people as regards footwear.

"These natives of Northern Africa," writes the commissioner, "either go barefoot or cobble to an appreciable extent their own shoes. In all the souks and bazaars of the larger cities there is a special section devoted to the making of the native footwear, although as the hand and not a machine is employed, the production is of necessity very limited. But so is the demand.

"In the urban centres many of the natives wear some kind of shoe, but out in the country parts the use of footwear is more conspicuous by its absence. This does not, however, exclude the fact that many an Arab or Moor, even in the outlying places, may have a pair of sandals or else generally what might be called a slipper—a babouche—after the Turkish style with the back part folded inwards and trodden under the heel. For ordinary wear these are generally made of plain brown or tan leather, while in the case of the rich they may be embroidered in gay colors."

A Social Evening.

Some thirty members of the "Helping Hand" Bible Class, of Grace Methodist Church, spent one of the most enjoyable evenings in the social history of the class, since its organization, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. M. Barnhart, Palace Road, on Friday evening. The early part of the evening was thoroughly enjoyed by community singing, readings, etc., after which some business pertaining to the interest of the class was transacted. Light refreshments were served, and the balance of the evening spent by all indulging in some mirth producing games. The gathering broke up about 12.30 o'clock, all voicing their appreciation of this most pleasant evening made possible by the host and hostess.

The Late J. K. McCargar.

Following an illness of two years the death occurred Friday at the Home for Incurables of J. K. McCargar, ex-Warden of Hastings County, in his eighty-second year. Born near Kemptville, Grenville County, where he spent his early years, Mr. McCargar, early in life, went to Belleville, where he was a prominent citizen for 55 years. There he entered the cheese business, and at one time operated five cheese factories, buying for European firms. He was one of the first Presidents of the Eastern Ontario Dairymen's Association. The late Mr. McCargar had been a great worker in the Liberal cause, and in 1908 was the Liberal standard-bearer in Hastings County. For many years he was a member of Hastings County Council, holding the positions of Deputy Reeve and Warden of the County before he retired. Under the Ross Government he was appointed Fisheries Inspector for the Bay of Quinte district. It is not many years ago since he was well-known as a racehorse man, at which time he owned a number of trotting horses. For the past 50 years he had been a diligent reader, and had been a very intimate friend of the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier. The late Mr. McCargar was a former owner of Selby and Shorey cheese factories, and was a brother-in-law of Sheriff Vandervoort. The remains were taken to Belleville for interment.

A Sudden Death.

Citizens of Napanee were shocked on Monday morning to hear of the sudden death of Mr. Frank C. Bogart, a worthy citizen and one who, in his quiet way, made many warm friends. Mr. Bogart arose early in the morning as usual and shortly afterward complained of a pain in the back of his head. He laid down on a sofa and in a short time stated that he felt much better. His wife went upstairs to attend to her mother and when she returned in a few moments she found her husband lying on the floor. Medical aid was summoned, but Mr. Bogart was beyond human aid and passed away in a few minutes. Mr. Bogart was about sixty years of age and had been a resident of Napanee for years. During the past few years he had been in the real estate business. A private funeral will be held from his late residence on Robinson street, on Wednesday afternoon at 2.30. Besides his widow he leaves one sister, Mrs. S. L. Daly, and two brothers, Messrs. Mortimer and F. L. Bogart.

Suddenly Afflicted at Kingston.

Mrs. William Pringle, of Wilton, was found unconscious on Brock street, Kingston on Saturday. Mrs. Pringle had not been feeling well and went to Kingston on Friday to consult a doctor. On Saturday morning she was on her way to a doctor's office and when in front of the fire hall reeled and would have fallen had she not been caught by a fireman, who was standing close by at the time. The lady, who was unknown at the time, was taken to the Hotel Dieu and given medical attention. On arrival at the hospital her name was asked, but no one could give any information. When some hours had passed and no inquiries were received, the Kingston papers were given the news and in a short time her friends with whom she was staying, were at her bedside. The reason no inquiries were made was because Mrs. Pringle told them she would not return until after dinner. Mrs. Pringle is 74 years of age and is suffering from a stroke and slight hopes are held out for her recovery.

A FIGHT FOR PRIVILEGE

Writhing is the only word that adequately describes the attitudes of the Montreal Star with regard to any lowering of protective duties. It would seem that the wild antics it has kept up for many weeks against taxation, were only meant to refer to those taxes that turn money into the treasury, not at all to the tribute collected by the plunderbund. A sop has indeed been thrown to these in the shape of certain reductions of the sales tax, which reductions will come directly out of the revenue. But it seems to have ministered no relief. What goes to the heart is any reduction in protective duties. That means free trade hovering in the offing. They are sure it does ; and quite possibly they are right. The Star—we wonder if it talks thus in its country edition for the prairies,—promises the nation the most savage filibustering possible on behalf of what calls itself industry, as though industry was not the very thing that privilege is plundering. They are going to claim Sir John Macdonald as their patron saint. He deserves that bad eminence. He proclaimed himself a free trader, as he had always been, but when he was out of power the "industries," so-called, having been rebuffed by the Mackenzie Government, got round him and offered him the sinews of war, to regain power, if he would give them protection. He told them that if he shook down the chestnuts for the hogs he must have the bacon. Then he explained to the nation that he was a free trader but not a jug-handled free trader, referring of course to the United States, not to Britain, against whom he was about to make jug-handled war. Moreover, he was only for the fostering of infant industries and the planting of tall chimneys. When the infants should be grown they would no longer want pap ; oh, no. So much for that great prophet ! Then protection orators will have the effrontery to put forward Sir Wilfrid Laurier as their next prophet, who, they say, maintained the Macdonald tariff. One of the first acts of the Laurier government was a reduction of the Macdonald tariff, as far as it affected goods from Britain, by twenty-five per cent. Though that was a slight correction of the jug-handled conditions that Macdonald abhorred, it was where the beneficiaries of the tariff liked it least. But as their war had been ostensibly against the United States, and as they had kept on calling the Liberals anti-British, they had not much to say. As soon as it was thought reasonable that reduction of a fourth was increased to a third. Did those beneficiaries—we shall not lose the Macdonald epithet—regard that as carrying out the Macdonald policy ? They did to some extent get the British preference hocused. It was when Laurier and Fielding made an agreement for reciprocal reductions toward the United States, an agreement that did not affect the manufacturers, that they felt free to train upon them all the artillery that money could buy and carried the country against them. It was certainly not for maintaining the Macdonald tariff that they slew them, but because they saw their heart was set in them to get rid of that tariff. Now that that heart-rending cry of "wolf, wolf," has died upon the peoples' ears, they are setting it up again and with knowledge of their past tactics we can promise that there will not be any assertion or slander too preposterous for them to make. But the loud plea for protection is to be for the workingman. Sir Henry Drayton is already pathetic about him. Capital always is when seeking privilege for itself. Still, so long as migration from the farms to the cities continues, the country will not easily see why the cities should be bonused at its cost.—Montreal Witness.

ENDS 50 YEARS' LITIGATION

Refuses Fortune Willed by Empress When France Puts in Bill.

PARIS, April 28.—Prince Victor Napoleon has just put an end to the half century's litigation between the family of the third Napoleon and the French Republic by refusing the fortune bequeathed to his young daughter, the Princess Marie Clothilde, by the late Empress Eugenie.

When the latter died in 1920 she had failed to recover from the state more than 2,250,000 francs in respect of the Emperor's civil list due at the time of the overthrow of the Empire. Although judgment was given against the Government of the Republic, Parliament in 1899 refused to vote the necessary credits and the only satisfaction obtained by the Empress was the restitution of Gobelin tapestries and objects of art belonging to her family.

Recently the French Government intimated its willingness to pay 2,250,000 francs to her young heiress, but at the same time presented a bill for nearly 5,000,000 francs for taxes and death duties. Prince Victor, on behalf of his daughter, decided it was cheaper to waive all rights, and moreover makes the state a present of the Malmaison estate near Paris, where the Empress Josephine lived.

Co-operation Will Win.

"Competition is no longer the life of trade but co-operation is the assurance of success. There are three forces leading us to bigger things and they must co-operate. One is finance and the others are labor and the farmer. The farmer has been independent and an individually and compete with others collectively. There must be co-operation for sales, for purchases and for production. We must standardize our products so the buyer will know just what he is to get."—Peter G. Ten Eyck before Oneida County Farm Bureau.

DENOUNCE EXTREMISTS

Marx Makes Plea for Carrying Out Experts' Report

German Chancellor Says Program Would Best Reconcile France and Germany—Wants Terms of Proposal Carried Out as Indivisible Whole.

DUSSELDORF, April 28.—Dr. William Marx, the Chancellor, yesterday delivered a campaign address here before an audience of 4,000 persons. He made a strong plea for the carrying out of the program set forth in the report of the experts who recently investigated the economic and financial condition of Germany.

Dr. Marx declared the fulfilment of the terms of the program would be the best method for reconciling the situation between France and Germany. It would, he said, be to the best interests of both countries.

The chancellor's speech throughout was couched in a conciliatory tone, although he emphasized that it was Germany's understanding that a return of Germany's sovereign rights throughout the occupied territory was the first prerequisite for the commencement of the execution of the plan of experts.

Dr. Marx made it clear that he was speaking as a candidate of the Centre Catholic party in the forthcoming election, and not as chancellor. He denounced the extreme Nationalists, saying he hoped the German people would not be so foolish as to place their destiny in the hands of a group that wished to launch the country upon a policy of madness. Their "fanatical propaganda," he declared was a crime against the German people.

"I have remarked," Dr. Marx said "that the more one approaches the occupied territories the more one sees the population reasonable and the Nationalist ideas less accepted. I should like to see a few regiments of the army of occupation stationed in Bavaria, just to observe what effect this would produce on the squawkers of Munich, who make such an outcry because they feel themselves so far away and so sheltered from danger."

Dr. Marx said Germany had no intention of trying to enter the League of Nations as at present constituted. He said that when the League ceased to serve the "particular interests of certain powers" and became an organization in which all nations were treated with absolute equality Germany would apply for membership.

Concerning the reports of the experts on reparation, the chancellor said Germany had decided to accept them with the understanding that they would be considered as an indivisible whole; that Germany would be able to have charge economically and financially of the occupied regions; that Germans expelled from the Ruhr and the Rhineland would be allowed to return, and that prisoners would be liberated.

Joseph Meighen Dies.

OTTAWA, April 28. — Joseph Meighen, the father of Rt. Hon. Arthur Meighen, died Saturday evening at his residence, Gilmour street. Besides his widow he is survived by three sons and three daughters. The daughters are Mrs. S. W. White, Toronto; Mrs. Robertson, Edmonton, Alta., and Mrs. J. Anderson, of Welland, Ont. The three sons are Arthur Meighen, Ottawa, the eldest; William Meighen, warden of Dorchester Penitentiary, and Edward Meighen, of Ashmont, Alta. Mr. Meighen was born in St. Mary's, Ont., almost 78 years ago. His father, Gordon Meighen, had been a school teacher in Ireland and emigrated to Perth, Lanark County, Ont., in the '30's of the last century. There he continued his profession as a teacher and about ten years later moved to St. Mary's, Perth County, Western Ontario, where he built and presided as teacher in the first school established there. The deceased was his only son, and his one sister, Mrs. Gilpin, of Toronto, predeceased him sixteen years ago.

The officiating clergy were the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Dean of Windsor, the Bishop of Nebraska and the Canon of St. George's Chapel. Action by British Government Is Matter for Serious Doubt

In Event of Special Legislation to Remove Difficulties, Strong Opposition Is Expected on Ulster's Behalf—Dublin Awaits London's Move.

LONDON, April 28.—The Irish deadlock is discussed from every aspect by the morning papers as the paramount question of the day. The assumption continues general that the British Government is bound to act within the next few days, but views differ as to exactly what form the action will take, and the Government itself has given no hint. It is supposed the question will be discussed by the Cabinet early this week.

In the event of the Government resorting to special legislation to remove the difficulties, some of the commentators foresee trouble in Parliament, where strong opposition is expected on Ulster's behalf.

The Ulsterites take their stand on the Government of Ireland Act of 1920, which gave them the six counties. This they regarded as a final settlement, and the Belfast Ministers refused to become a party to the treaty of 1921 which the British Government concluded with the Southern leaders. They are understood to be agreeable to some minor adjustments of the frontier line, but beyond this they will not go.

The Free State Government, on the other hand, stands by the treaty and nothing but the treaty, and is awaiting the British Government's next move. Assuming that this move will be an amending act to compel Ulster to appoint a Boundary Commissioner, The Westminster Gazette says such a measure might pass the House of Commons, but that it would certainly be held up by the Lords and could only be adopted if passed by the House in three successive sessions, as provided for under the Parliamentary rule.

There is a suggestion in some quarters that the Free State's attitude is mainly influenced by the domestic situation, especially by the pressure from the anti-treatyites.

BRANTFORD GIRL DEAD

Ran Directly in Its Path in Pursuit of a Ball.

BRANTFORD, Ont., April 28.—After a ball which had gone past her into the street, Margaret Newham, eight-year-old daughter of Harry Newham, Eagle Place butcher, and Mrs. Newham, on Saturday afternoon ran directly in front of an automobile driven by Mrs. Suddaby, receiving injuries which resulted in her death at the Brantford General Hospital last night. Investigation was made by the police, but no action will be taken, members of the Newham family stating that Mrs. Suddaby was not in the least blamable.

More Women Jailed.

SCARSDALE, N.Y., April 28.—Arrested on a charge of highway robbery, Mrs. Anne Germann, 25, and Mrs. Julia Van Dyke, the same age, both of Yonkers, together with Sullivan Belli and Salvatore Pappalardo, also of Yonkers, were arraigned before Judge Seeley here to-day.

The bobbed-haired women were released on $2,500 bail, which was quickly furnished.

Since the robbery of two soldiers of $310 while on an automobile ride in Greenburgh early one morning last January the Yonkers authorities have been working on the case, resulting in to-day's arrests.

The soldiers were riding with the two women. The party was halted and robbed by three masked men. The soldiers' car was driven by Pappalardo. He and the women now are charged with conspiring with the hold-up men.

Goodyear III. Wins.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, April 28.—The last of the seven balloons that took the air at Kelly Field here late Wednesday in the national balloon elimination race came to earth Friday far up in Southeastern Minnesota. W. T. Van Orman, piloting the Goodyear III., entry of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company, with his aid, C. K. Woollman, brought the race to a close when he landed early Friday afternoon near Rochester, Minn., approximately 1,100 miles from the starting point, the farthest distance traversed by any of the contestants.

The winner fell approximately 73 miles short of the United States distance record of 1,172.9 miles, established in 1910 by W. R. Hawley, in the race from St. Louis.

Quebec For Rotary Meeting.

SYRACUSE, N.Y., April 28.—Clarence B. Williams of Utica, was elected district governor of the twenty-eighth district Rotary conference, in concluding session here Sunday. Quebec was selected for the 1925 meeting.

The election was unanimous.

Robert Stead, the Canadian author, addressing a luncheon gathering of delegates, warned against evils of over population.

Six Lives Are Lost.

BUFFALO, April 28.—Six lives were lost on Lake Erie on Friday night when the fishing tug Peerless of Erie burned and sank off the southeast shoal.

Bodies of two members of the ill-fated crew, brought here to-day by the steamer Otto M. Reiss, were identified. They are: Michael J. Tansey and Edward Rindfuss, both of Erie.

The Keystone representative said the Peerless carried a crew of only six.

Commits Suicide.

COBALT, April 28.—Stretching himself across a bed in his house at Mile-age 104, just north of here, George Gagnier, about 40 years of age, committed suicide Saturday evening with a stick of dynamite. Apparently he placed the dynamite on his chest and applied a match to the fuse. His body was badly mangled, and the house was damaged by the explosion. Gagnier previously had sent his little daughter out of the house.

CATTLE MARKETS

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

TORONTO, April 28.—With receipts light and general quality of the offering good, cattle prices last week advanced a shade to a quarter per cwt., exporters, steers, choice butchers and cows finding a strong demand. On Monday the top load sold at 9 cents, and choice heavy steers sold generally at 8½ to 8¾c throughout the week. The export shipment made at mid-week amounted to 723 head, including heavy cows at 5¾ to 6c, and some bulls at 4½ to 5¼c, in addition to the bulk of the heavy steer offering. Buyers for the domestic trade paid up to 8c for some small lots of handyweight steers, and as high as 7¾c for top loads of butchers. Good butcher bulls brought 4½ to 5½c, but the medium and common kind were just steady at prices down to 3c, the run including but few of the real common kind. However, the supply of stores was strictly limited, and values held firm. In fact, one load of shortkeeps went back to the country at 7½c, and light steers for feeding purposes brought 5½ to 6¼c. Receipts of milkers and springers were light, but demand was only fair, and prices ruled just steady, with $90 very seldom exceeded in top sales.

Decrease of some 700 head in the calf supply did not improve sales possibilities so far as the bulk was concerned.

The total offering for the week in sheep and lambs amounted to less than 100 head. Ewes naturally were firm, with the best offered bringing 16c per pound. Spring lambs were more plentiful than heretofore, but prices were unchanged so far as lambs per head were concerned. Sheep were a very light offering, and they sold steady at 8 to 9½c for those carrying wool, and 7c per pound for the clipped ones.

Hog receipts early in the week were somewhat light, and the price advanced 25c per cwt. The advance held despite the fact that the week's total proved a shade heavier than that of the week previous, the closing prices being 8c, fed and watered, though Thursday's market was a bit soft.

Live stock receipts at the Union Yards last night for to-day's market were as follows: Cattle, 4,191; calves, 1,139; hogs, 5,277; sheep, 155.

MONTREAL, April 28.—Exports of pulp and paper from Canada for the month of March, according to the report of the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association, were valued at $14,720,223, an increase of $3,773,024 over the previous month, and the highest since October, 1920, when prices were considerably higher than they are to-day. The above sum is divided into $10,604,573 for newsprint, etc., and $4,115,659 for pulp.

For the first quarter of the year value of exports of pulp and paper from Canada was $36,567,472 compared with a total of $34,234,167 for the first quarter of 1923. The increase was solely in paper, there being less pulp exported than in 1923.

Exports of pulpwood in March were valued at $1,858,546, a considerable advance over the previous month. For the first quarter of the year Canada exported pulpwood valued at $3,843,160, compared with $3,045,450 in the same quarter of 1923.

Roland Yorke

By MRS. HENRY WOOD

AUTHOR OF

"East Lynne," "Verner's Pride," "The Channings,
"Lord Oakburn's Daughters" Etc.

I do wish you'd let the fellow's name be; he's not so very good to talk of," retorted Gerald, in a rage.

But Roland was not so easily put out of the conversation. As luck had it when the servant brought Sir Vincent's letters in there was one from Roland among them. Vincent laughed outright as he read it:—

"Dear Vincent,—I happened to overhear old Greatorex say yesterday that Sir Vincent Yorke wanted a working bailiff for the land Sunny Mead. I! wish! to! offer! myself! for! the! situation! There! I put it strong that you may not mistake. Of course, I am a relative, which I can't help being; and a working bailiff is but a kind of upper servant. But I'll be very glad of the place if you'll give it me, and will do my duty in it as far as I can, putting my best shoulder to the wheel; and I'll never presume upon our being cousins to go into your house uninvited, or put myself in your way; and my wife would not call on Lady Yorke if she did not wish it. I'll be the bailiff—you the master.

"I don't tell you I am a first hand at farming; but, if perseverance and sticking to work can teach, I shall soon learn it. I picked up some experience at Port Natal; and had to drive wagons and other animals. Of course I know all about hay-making; and I'd used to be one of the company at old Pierce's harvest homes, on his farm near Helstonleigh. I don't suppose you'd want me to thresh the wheat myself; but I'm strong to do it, and would not mind. I would be always up before dawn in spring to see to the young lambs; and I'll soon acquire the ins and outs of manuring and draining. Do try me, Vincent! I'll put my shoulder to the wheel in earnest for you. There'd be one advantage in taking me—that I should be honest and true to your interests. Whereas some bailiffs like to serve themselves better than their masters.

"As to wages, I'd leave that to you. You'd not give less than a hundred a year to begin with; and at the twelvemonth's end, when I had made myself qualified, you might make it two. Perhaps you'd give the two hundred at once. I don't wish to presume because I am a relative; and if the two hundred would be too much at first for, to tell the truth, I don't know how bailiffs' pay runs, please excuse my having named it. I expect there are lots of pretty cottages to be hired down there; may be there's one on the estate appropriated to the bailiff. I may as well mention that I am a first-rate horseman, and could gallop about like a fire-engine; having nearly lost my life more times than one, learning to ride the wild cattle when up the country at Port Natal.

"I think that's all I have to say. Only try me! If you do, you will find how willing I am. Besides being strong, I am naturally active, with plenty of energy: the land should not go to ruin for the want of being looked after. My object in life now is to get a certanty that will bring me in something tolerably good to begin, and go on to three hundred a year, or more; for I should not like Annabel to take pupils always. I don't know whether a bailiff ever gets as much.

"Bede Greatorex can give you a good character of me for steadiness and industry. And if I have stuck to this work, I should do better by yours; for writing I hate, and knocking about a farm I'd like better than anything.

"You'll let me have an answer as soon as convenient. If you take me I shall have to order leggings and other suitable toggery from Carrick's tailor; and he might be getting on with the things.

"Wishing you a merry Christmas, which will soon be here (don't I recollect one of mine at Port Natal, when I had nothing for dinner and the same for supper), I remain, dear Vincent,

"Yours truly,
"ROLAND YORKE."

"Sir Vincent Yorke."

To watch the curl of Gerald's lips, the angry sarcasm of his face, as he perused this document, which the baronet handed to him with a laugh, was amusing. It might have made a model of scorn for a painter's easel. Dropping the letter from his fingers, as if there were contamination in its very touch, he flicked it across the table.

"You'll send it back to him in a blank envelope, won't you?"

"No; why should I?" returned Sir Vincent, who was good-natured in the main. "I'll answer him when I've time. Do you know, Gerald, I think you rather disparage Roland."

Gerald opened his astonished eyes. "Disparage him! How can he be disparaged?—he is just as low as he can be. An awful blot, and nothing else, on the family escutcheon."

"The family don't seem to be troubled much by him—saving me. He appears to regard me as a sheet-anchor—who can provide for the world, himself included. I rather like the young fellow; he is so genuine."

"Don't call him young," reproved Gerlad; "he'll be twenty-nine next May."

"And in mind and manners he is nineteen!"

"He talks of pigs—see what he has brought his to," exclaimed Gerald, somewhat forgetting his fashion. "The—aw—low kind of work he condescends to do—the mean way he is not ashamed to confess he lives in! Every bit of family pride has gone out of him, and given place to vulgar instincts."

"As Roland has tumbled into the mire, better for him to be honest and work," returned Sir Vincent, mincing with his dry toast and one poached egg, for he was delicate in appetite. "What else could he do? Of course there's the credit system and periodical white-washings, but I should not care to go in for that sort of thing myself."

"Are you in want of a bailiff?" growled Gerald, wondering whether the last remarks were meant to be personal.

"Greatorex has engaged one for me. How are you getting on yourself, Gerald?"

"Not—aw—at all. I'm awfully hard up."

"You always are, Ger, according to your story," was the baronet's remark, laughing slightly.

And somehow the laugh sounded in Gerald's ear as a hard laugh—as one that boded no good results to the petition he meant to prefer before his departure—that Sir Vincent would accommodate him with a loan.

"He's close-fisted as a miser," was Gerald's mental comment. "His father all over again. Neither of them would part with a shilling save for self-gratification: and both could spend enough on that. I'll ask him for a hundred point blank, before I leave; more, if I can feel my way to do it. Fortune is shamefully unequal in this life. There's Vin with his baronetcy, and his nice little place here and every comfort in it, and his town house, and his clear four thousand a year, and no end of odds and ends of money besides, nest eggs of various shapes and sizes, and his future wife a seventy thousand pounder in her own right; and here's myself by his side, a better man than he any day, with not a coin of my own in the whole world, nor likely to drop into one by inheritance, and afraid to venture about London for fear of being nabbed! Curse the whole thing! He is shabby in trifles too. To give me a miserable two days' invitation. Two days! I'll remain twenty if I can."

"You don't eat, Gerald."

"I've made a famous breakfast, thank you. Do you spend Christmas down here, Vincent?"

"Not I. The day after to-morrow, when you leave me, I start for Paris."

"For Paris!" echoed Gerald, his mouth falling at the sudden failure of his pleasant scheme.

"Miss Trehern and her father are there. We shall remain for the jour de l'an, see the bonbon shops, and all that, and then come back again."

"And I hope the bonbon shops will choke him!" thought kindly Gerald.

Sir Vincent Yorke did not himself go in for keepers and dogs. There was little game on his land, and he was too effeminate to be much of a sportsman. He owned two guns, and that comprised the whole of his shooting paraphernalia. Breakfast over, he had his guns brought, and desired Gerald to take his choice. Now the handling and understanding of guns did not rank among Gerald Yorke's accomplishments. Brought up in the cathedral town, only away from it on occasions at Dr. Yorke's living (and that happened to be in a town also), the young Yorkes were not made familiar with out-door sports. Dr. Yorke had never followed them himself, and saw no necessity for training his sons to them. Even riding they were not very familiar with. Roland's letter had just informed Sir Vincent that he had nearly lost his life learning to ride the wild horses when up the country at Port Natal. Probably he had learnt also to understand something about guns: we may be very sure of one thing, that if he did not understand them, he would have voluntarily avowed it. Not so Gerald. Gerald, made up of artificialisms—for nothing seemed real about him but his ill-temper—touched the guns here, and fingered the guns there, and critically examined them everywhere, as if he were the greatest connoisseur alive, and had invented a breech-loader himself; and finally said he would take this one. So they went out, each with his gun, and a favorite dog of the baronet's, Spot, and joined a neighbor's shooting party, as had been arranged. Colonel Clutton's land joined Sir Vincent's; he was a keen lover of sport, always making up parties for it, and if Sir Vincent went out at all, it was sure to be with Colonel Clutton.

"To-day and to-morrow will be my last turn-out this season," observed the baronet, as they walked along. "Not sorry for it. One gets a large amount of fatigue: don't think the slaughter compensates for that."

Reaching the meeting-place, they found a party of some three or four gentlemen and two keepers. Gerald was introduced to Colonel Clutton, an elderly man with snow-white hair. The sport set in. It was late in the season, and the birds were getting scarce or wary, but a tolerably fair number fell.

"The gentleman don't seem to handle his gun gainly, sir, as if he'd played with one as a babby," observed one of the keepers confidentially in Sir Vincent's ear.

He alluded to Gerald Yorke. Sir Vincent turned and looked. Though not much addicted to shooting, he was thoroughly conversant with it; and what he saw, as he watched Gerald, a little surprised him.

"I say, Gerald Yorke, you must take care," he called out. "Did you never handle a gun before?"

The suggestion offended Gerald: the question nettled him. His face grew dark.

"What do you mean, Sir Vincent?" was his angry answer. He would have liked to affirm his great knowledge of shooting; but his chief practice had been with a pop-gun at school.

Sir Vincent laughed a little. "Don't do any mischief, that's all."

It might have been that the public caution caused Gerald to be more careless, just to prove his proficiency; it might have been that it tended to hurry him. Certainly he would not have caused harm wilfully; but nevertheless it took place. Not ten minutes after Sir Vincent had spoken, he was crossing a narrow strip of open ground towards a copse. Gerald, leaping through a gap in the hedge not far behind, carrying his gun (like a senseless man) on full cock, contrived, in some inextricable manner, to discharge it. Whether his elbow caught in the leafless branches, or the trigger caught [illegible] what it was, Gerald Yorke [illegible] knew, and never will know to his dying day. The charge went off; there was a cry, accompanied by shouts of warning, somebody on the ground in front, and the rest running to surround the fallen man.

"You have no right to come out, sir, unless you can handle a gun properly!" spoke Colonel Clutton to Gerald, in the moment's confusion. "I have been watching your awkwardness all the morning."

Gerald looked pale with fear, dark with anger. He made no reply whatever; only pressed forward to see who was down, the men, in their velveteen coats and leggings, looking much alike. Sir Vincent Yorke.

"It's not much, I think," said the baronet good-naturedly, as he looked up at Gerald. "But I say, though, you should have candidly answered me that you were not in the habit of shooting, when I sent you the invitation."

No, it was not much. A few shots had entered the calf of the left leg. They got out pocket-handkerchiefs, and tied them tightly round to stop the hemorrhage. The dog, Spot, laid his head close to his master's face, and whined pitiably.

"What sense them dumb animals have!—almost human!" remarked the keeper.

"This will stop my Paris trip," observed Sir Vincent, as they were conveying him home.

"Better that was stopped than your wedding," replied Colonel Clutton, with a jesting smile. "You keep yourself quiet, now, that you may be well for that. Don't talk."

Sir Vincent acquiesced readily. At the best of times he was sensitive to pain, and somewhat of a coward in regard to his own health. At home he was met by a skilful surgeon. The shots were extracted, and Sir Vincent was made comfortable in bed. Gerald Yorke waylaid the doctor afterwards.

"Is it serious? Will he do well? Sir Vincent is my cousin."

"Oh—Mr. Yorke; the gentleman whose gun unfortunately caused the mishap," was the answer. "Of course these accidents are always serious, more or less. This one might have been far worse than it is."

"He will do well?"

"Quite well. At least I hope so. I see nothing to hinder it. Sir Vincent will be a tractable patient, you see; and a good deal lies in that."

"There's no danger, then?"

"Oh, no; no danger."

Gerald, relieved, had the grace to express his regret and sorrow to the baronet. Sir Vincent begged him to think no more about it; only recommended him not to go out with a party in future, until he had had some practice. Gerald, untrue to the end, said he was a little out of practice; he should soon get into it again. Sir Vincent made quite light of the hurt; it was nothing to speak of, the doctor had said; would not delay his marriage, or anything. But he did not ask Gerald to remain; and that gentleman, in spite of his hints, and his final offer to stay, found he was expected to go. Sir Vincent expressed his acknowledgments, but said he wished for perfect quiet. So, on the day following the accident, Gerald Yorke returned to town; which was a day sooner than, even at the worst, he had bargained for; and arrived in a temper.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

In Custody.

Pacing his room, in the worst state of perturbation possible, was the Rev. Mr. Ollivera. He had so paced it all the morning. Neglecting his ordinary duties, staying indoors when he ought to have been out, unable to eat or to rest, he was in a state of most distressing indecision. The whole of the night had he tossed and turned, and rose up again and again to walk his room, struggling with his conscience. For years past he had, so to say, lived on the anticipation of this hour, when the memory of his dear brother should be cleared of its foul stain, and the true criminal brought to light. And, now that it had come, he was hesitating whether or not to take advantage of it! whether to let the stain remain, and the criminal escape. About one o'clock, when the remembrance of the miserable grave, and of him who had been so miserably put into it, lay very strong upon him, Alletha Rye came into the room with some white cravats of the parson's in her hand. She was neat and nice as usual, wearing a soft merino gown with white-worked cuffs and collars, her fair hair smooth and abundant.

"I have done the best I could with them, sir; cut off the edges and hemmed them afresh," she said. "After that, I passed the iron over them, and they look just as if fresh got up."

"Thank you," murmured Mr. Ollivera, the color flushing his face, and speaking in a confused kind of manner, like a man overtaken in a crime.

"Great heaven, can I go on with it?" he exclaimed, as she went out, leaving the neckerchiefs on the table. "Is it possible to believe that she did it?—with her calm good face, with her clear honest eye?" he continued in an agony of distress. "Oh, for guidance!—that I may be shown what my course ought to be!"

As a personal matter, to give Alletha Rye into custody would cause him grievous pain. She had lived under the same roof with him, showing him voluntarily a hundred little courtesies and kindnesses. These white cravats of his, just put to rights, had been undertaken in pure good will. How very much of our terrible seasons of distress might be spared to us, if we could but see a little further than the present moment; than the atmosphere immediately around. Henry William Ollivera might have been saved his had he but known that, while he was doubting, another was acting. Mr. Greatorex had taken it into his own hands, and the trouble was, even then, at the very door. A commotion below. Mr. Roland Yorke had entered, and was calling out to the house to bring his dinner. It was taken to him in the shape of some slices of roast mutton and potatoes. When Mrs. Jones had a joint herself, Roland was served from it. Close almost upon that, there came a rather quiet double knock at the street door, which Miss Rye went to answer. Roland thought he recognized a voice, and ran out, his mouth full of mutton.

ASTHMA NEVER CAME BACK

Since Taking The Fruit Treatment in "Fruit-a-tives"

Read this letter from Mrs. J. M. Pennington of New Rockland, P.Q.

"In 1919, I was taken with Bronchial Asthma and no one knows what I suffered during the winter. I began having choking spells and would just gasp for breath and could not speak. The doctor said he could do nothing for me.

In the spring of 1920, I started taking "Fruit-a-tives" and soon the choking spells became easier and I have not had one since May 7th, 1920. It is such a relief to be able to go to bed and have no thought of having to get up in the night for an hour or more as I did all that winter, but never have to now, all because I take a "Fruit-a-tives" tablet every night.

"Why, it's never you, old Butterby! What brings you in London again?"

Whatever brought Mr. Butterby to London, something curious appeared to have brought him to Mrs. Jones's. A policeman had followed him in, and was shutting the street door, with a manner quite at home. There escaped a faint cry from Alletha, and her face turned white as ashes. Roland stared from one to the other.

"What on earth's the matter?" demanded he.

"I'd like to speak to you in private for a minute, Miss Rye," said Mr. Butterby, in a low civil tone. "Tomkins, you wait there."

She went higher up the passage and looked round something like a stag at bay. There was no unoccupied room to take him to. Mr. Brown's frugal dinner tray (luncheon, as he called it) was in his, waiting his entrance. That the terrible man of law with his officer had come to arrest him Alletha never doubted. A hundred wild ideas of telegraphing him some impossible warning, not to enter, went teeming through her brain. Tomkins stood on the entrance mat; Roland Yorke, with his accustomed curiosity, put his back against his parlor door-post to watch proceedings.

"Miss Rye, I'd not have done this of my own accord, leastways not so soon, but it has been forced upon me," whispered Mr. Butterby. "I've got to ask you to go with me."

"To ask me?" she tremblingly said, while he was showing her a paper, probably the warrant.

"Are you so much surprised, after there avowal you made to me last night? If I'd gone and told a police officer that I had killed somebody, it would not astonish me to be took."

Her face fell. The pallor of her cheeks was colored by a faint crimson; her eyes flashed with a condemning light.

"I told you in confidence, as one friend might speak to another, in defence of him who was not there to defend himself," she panted. "How could I suppose you would hasten treacherously to use it against me?"

"Ah," said Mr. Butterby, "in things of that sort us law defenders is just the wrong sort to make confidants of. But now, look here, Miss Rye, I didn't go and abuse that confidence, and though it is me that has put the wheels of the law in motion, it is done in obedience to orders, which I had no power to stop. I'm sorry to have to do it; and I've come down with the warrant myself out of respect to you, that things might be accomplished as genteel as might be."

"Now then, Alletha! Do you know that your dinner's getting cold? What on earth are you stopping there for? Who is it?"

The interruption was from Mrs. Jones, called out through the nearly closed door of her parlor. Alletha, making no response, looked fit to die.

"Have you come to arrest me?" she whispered.

"Well, it's about it, Miss Rye. Apprehend, that is. We'll get a cab and you'll go in it with my friend there, all snug and quiet. I'm vexed that young Yorke should just be at home. Tried to get here half an hour earlier, but——"

Mrs. Jones's door was pulled open with a jerk. To describe the astonishment on her face when she saw the state of affairs would be a work of skill. Alletha with a countenance of ghastly fear; Mr. Butterby whispering to her; the policeman on the door mat; Roland Yorke looking leisurely on.

"Well, I'm sure!" exclaimed Mrs. Jones. "What may be the meaning of this?"

There could be no evasion now. Had Alletha in her secret heart hoped to keep it from her tart, condemning, and strong-minded sister, the possibility was over. She went down the few steps that led to the room, and entered it; Mr. Butterby close behind her. The latter was shutting the door, when Roland Yorke walked in, taking French leave. Which of the two stared the most, Mrs. Jones or Roland, and which of the two felt inclined to abuse Mr. Butterby the most, when his errand became known, remains a question to this day. Roland's championship was hot.

"You know you always do take the wrong people, Butterby!"

"Now, young Mr. Yorke, just you concern yourself with you own business, and leave other folk's alone," was the detective's answering reprimand. "I don't see what call you have to be in this here room at all."

The possibility of Alletha's being cognizant of the cause of John Ollivera's death, much less of being connected with it, had never once entered the head of Mrs. Jones. She stared from one to the other in simple wonder.

"What is it you charge my sister with, Butterby?—the death of Counsellor Ollivera?"

"Well, yes; that's it," he answered.

"And how dare you do it?"

"Now, look you here, Mrs. Jones," said Butterby, in a tone of reason, putting his hand calmly on her wrist, "I've told Miss Rye, and I tell you, that these proceedings are instituted by the law, not by me; if I had not come to carry them out, another would, who might have done it in a rougher manner. A woman of your sense ought to see the matter in its right light. I don't say she's guilty, and I hope she'll be able to prove that she's not; but I can tell you this much, Mrs. Jones, there's them that have had their suspicions turned upon her from the first."

Being a woman of sense, as Mr. Butterby delicately insinuated, Mrs. Jones began to feel a trifle staggered.

ROLAND YORKE 22, 1922

Not at his words; they had little power over her mind, but at Alletha's appearance. Leaning against the wall there, white, faint, silent, she looked like one guilty, rather than innocent. And it suddenly struck Mrs. Jones that she did not attempt a syllable in her own defnce.

"Why don't you speak out, girl?" she demanded, in her tartest tone. "You can, I suppose?"

But the commotion had begun to cause attention in the quiet house. Not so much from its noise, as by that subtle instinct that makes itself heard, we cannot tell how; and Mr. Ollivera came in.

"Who has done this?" he briefly asked the detective.

"Mr. Greatorex, sir."

"The next thing they'll do may be to take me up on the charge," spoke Mrs. Jones, with acrimony. "What on earth put this into their miserable heads? You don't suspect her, I hope, Mr. Ollivera!"

He only looked at Mrs. Jones in silence by way of answer, a grave meaning in his sad face. It spoke volumes. Straightforward, always, Mrs. Jones bluntly put the question to him.

"Do you suspect her?"

"I have suspected her," came the low tones of Mr. Ollivera, in answer. "Believe me, Mrs. Jones, whatever may be the final result of this, I grieve for it bitterly."

"I say, why can't you speak up, and say you did not do it?" stamped Roland, in his championship. "Don't be frightened out of your senses by Butterby. He never pitches upon the right person; Mrs. J., remembers that."

"As this here talking won't do any good—and I'm sure if it would I'd let it go on a bit—suppose we make a move," interposed Butterby. "If you'd like to put up a few things to take with you, Miss Rye, do so. You'll have to go to Helstonleigh."

"Oh, law!" cried Roland. "I say, Butterby, it's a mistake, I know. Let her go. Come! you shall have all my dinner."

"Don't stand there like a statue, as if you were moonstruck," said Mrs. Jones, seizing her sister to administer a slight shaking. "Tell them you are innocent, girl, if you can; and let Butterby go about his business."

And, in response, Alletha neither spoke nor moved.

But at this moment another actor came upon the scene. A knock at the front door was politely answered at once by the policeman, glad, no doubt, to have something to do, and Mr. Brown entered, arriving at home for his mid-day meal. Roland dashed into the passage.

"I say, Brown, here is a stunning shame. Old Butterby's come to take Alletha Rye."

"Take her up for what?" Mr. Brown calmly asked.

"For the killing and slaying of Counsellor Ollivera, he says. But in these things he never was anything but a calf."

Mr. Brown turned into his room, put down his hat and a small paper parcel, and went on to the scene. Before he could say a word, Alletha Rye burst forth like one demented.

"Don't come here, Mr. Brown. We've nothing to do with strangers. I can't have all the world looking at me."

Mr. Brown took a quiet survey of matters with perfect self-possession, and then drew Mr. Butterby towards his room, just as though he had possessed the authority of Scotland Yard. Mrs. Jones was left alone with her sister, and caught hold of her two hands.

"Now then! What is the English of this? Had you aught to do with the death of Mr. Ollivera?"

"Never," said Alletha; "I would not have hurt a hair of his head."

Mrs. Jones, at the answer, hardly knew whether to slap the young woman's face or to shriek at her. All this disgrace brought upon her house, and Alletha tamely to submit to it. As a preliminary, she began a torrent of words.

"Hush!" said Alletha. "They think me guilty, and at present they must be let think it. I cannot help myself; if Butterby conveys me to Helstonleigh, he must do it."

Mrs. Jones was nearly staggered out of her passion.

"Lord help the wench for a fool! Don't you know that if you are conveyed to Helstonleigh it would be to take your trial at the next assizes? Would you face that?"

"I cannot tell," wailed Alletha, putting up her thin hand to her troubled face. "I must have time to think."

But we must follow Mr. Brown. As he passed into his room and closed the door, he took a tolerably long look into Butterby's eyes; possibly hoping to discover whether that astute officer knew him for Godfrey Pitman. He obtained no result. Had Mr. Butterby been a born natural he could not have looked more charmingly innocent. That he chose to indulge this demand for an interview for purposes of his own, those who knew him could not doubt. They stood together before the fireless hearth; however cold the weather might be, Mr. Brown's fire went out after breakfast and was not relighted until night.

"I beg your pardon, Mr. Butterby. With so much confusion in there"—nodding in the direction of Mrs. Jones's parlor"—I am not sure that I fully understood. Is it true that you are about to take Miss Rye into custody on suspicion of having caused the death of John Ollivera?"

"I have took her," was the short answer. "It is nothing to you, I suppose."

"It is this much to me: that I happen to be in a position to testify that she did not do it."

"Oh, you think so, do you," said Butterby, in a civil but slightly mocking tone. "I've knowed ten men at least swear to one man's innocence of a crime, and him guilty all the while. Don't say it was perjury: appearances are deceptive, and human nature's soft."

"I affirm to you in the hearing of heaven, that Alletha Rye was innocent of the death of John Ollivera," said Mr. Brown in a solemn tone that might have carried conviction to even a less experienced ear. "She had nothing whatever to do with it. Until the following morning, when she found him she was as ignorant as you that he was dead."

"Then why don't she speak up and say so? not that it could make any difference at the present stage of affairs."

"Will you let me ask who it is that has had her apprehended? Mr Bede Greatorex?"

"Bede Greatorex has had nothing to do with it. 'Twas his father."

"Well, now, I have a favor to ask you, Mr. Butterby," continued the other after a pause. "The good name of a young woman is a great deal easier lost than regained, as no one can tell better than yourself. It will be an awful thing if Alletha Rye, being innocent—as I swear to you she is—should be accused of this dreadful crime before the world. You have known her a long while; will you not stretch a point to save it?"

"That might depend a good deal upon what the point was," replied Mr. Butterby.

"A very simple one. Only this—that you would stay proceedings until I have had time to see Bede Greatorex. Let her remain here, in custody, of course—for I am not so foolish as to suppose you could release her—but don't molest her, don't take her away. In fact, treat her as though you knew she were wrongfully accused. You may be obliged to me for this later, Mr. Butterby—I won't say in the interests of humanity, but of justice."

Various thoughts and expressions of the past, as connected with Bede Greatorex, came crowding into the mind of Butterby. His lips parted with a smile, but it was not a favorable one.

"I think that Bede Greatorex could join with me in satisfying you that it was not Miss Rye," urged the petitioner. "I am almost sure he can do this if he will."

"Which is as much as to say that both he and you have got your suspicions turned on some other quarter," rejoined Butterby. "Who was it?"

That Mr. Brown's cheeks took a darker tinge at the direct query, was plain to be seen. He made no answer.

"Come! Who did that thing? You know."

"If I do not know—and I am unable to tell you that I do, Mr. Butterby—I can yet make a shrewd guess at it."

"And Bede Greatorex, too, you say?"

"I fancy he can."

Looking into each other's eyes, those two deep men, there ensued a silence. "If it wasn't this woman," whispered Butterby, "perhaps it was another."

Famous British Fortress.

The rock of Gibraltar has long been regarded as the most celebrated fortress in the world. It is a rocky promontory on the southwest coast of Spain and practically controls the entrance to the Mediterranean Sea. It rises to an altitude of 1,439 feet above sea level, is about three miles long, three-quarters of a mile broad, and is connected with the mainland by a low, sandy isthmus. Gibraltar has been in the possession of the English since 1704. Since the days of steamships and long-range guns, its military importance has materially declined. In 1720 and 1779 it successfully resisted severe attacks by the French and Spaniards. The name "Gibraltar" is a corruption of Jebel al Tarik, (Arabic for The Mount of Tarik.)

Rangers' Flags Returned

The scarred battle-flags of the famous Queen's Rangers, Governor Simcoe's own regiment, are now reposing at Toronto, thanks to the generosity of that public spirited citizen Mr. Fred H. Robins, and to the efforts of Dr. George H. Locke, Chief Librarian. Up till a year or two ago the old regimental banners had reposed between crossed swords in the great hall of Honiton Manor in Devonshire, the home of Lieut. John G. Simcoe, the man who was Upper Canada's first governor, who made Toronto the capital and who led the Rangers in the American Revolution.

Like many other families, the Simcoes have felt present-day taxes insupportable. And a year or two back, Linton Simcoe, great-great grandson of Governor Simcoe, was forced to sell the family heirlooms, Crested silver, family portraits by great artists, antique furniture and glass, even the war relics of his ancestor went under the hammer of a London auction room. [illegible] it is likely that Honiton Manor itself, has with surrounding 5,000 acre estate of park and farms of rich red earth, passed into the hands of strangers.

At the time of the sale, Dr. Locke through an agent, made efforts to secure the regiment colors. But in vain. A bidder with more cash at his disposal—an American it is said—snapped them up for $1,300. From this purchased or another, it seems, Mr. Fred Robins, now in England, was able to obtain the colors. They were formally presented to the city on Thursday, 7th Feb., by Mrs. Kenneth F. MacLaren. The war-stained flags will repose in the room housing the Robertson collection with other Simcoe relics.

The green-coated Queen's Rangers, with their powdered pigtails, white cross-belts, picturesque but uncomfortable headgear, and gaitered-legs, fought through the American Revolution with Simcoe as their colonel, down in what are to-day the United States. Simcoe narrowly escaped with his life, was captured in 1779, and later exchanged. After a long and honorable fighting record the Rangers were among British troops which surrendered with Cornwallis in 1787, when the British got into an untenable position. The original regiment was disbanded at the close of the Revolution. When in 1792 Simcoe came out to govern Upper Canada, the Queen's Rangers were again recruited and quartered at Niagara in extensive log barracks. They came with him across the lake, when the capital was, in 1793, removed to York, and the governor built Castle Frank on the Don as his official residence—a small log house, which stood a stone's throw from the present imposing palace where Lieutenant-Govenor Cockshutt lives.

The old long blockhouse, sheeted with timber, is to-day, the sole surviving building of the log barracks in which the Rangers were quartered at the Old Fort at the foot of Bathurst street. The rest of it perished on the two occasions when the Americans sacked Toronto in the war of 1812.

Recruiting for the Rangers proceeded briskly. In this connection the following advertisement appeared in the official Gazette: "Recruits wanted for His Majesty's First American Regiment or Queen's Rangers. . . fifty active young men, gentlemen volunteers shall receive ten guineas bounty money each on their arrival at the headquarters, be cloathed, accoutred, victualled and paid agreeably to His Majesty's regulations. None need apply to Lieut. Brooking at Niagara, but such as are perfectly fit for the most active service, at least 5 feet 4½ inches high, healthy and stout."

A pen picture of the future Toronto and the landing of the governor and his Rangers at Toronto is given in John Ross Robertson's compilation of Mrs. Simcoe's Diary. On Tuesday, 30th August, 1792, the lady writes: "The Queen's Rangers are encamped opposite the ship. After dinner we went on shore to fix a spot whereon to place canvas houses; we chose a rising ground divided by a creek from the camp which is ordered to be cleared immediately. The soldiers have cut down a great deal of wood to enable them to pitch their tents. We went in a boat two miles to the bottom of the Bay and walked through a grove of oaks where the town is intended to be built. A low spit of sand covered with oak, forms the Bay and breaks the horizon of the lake. The water in the Bay is beautifully clear and transparent."

The Rangers could throw aside their stiff-looking clothes and wield axes as well as flintlocks. Farther on in her diary, the governor's wife remarks that: "On this day the Rangers began to hew a road through the forest from York to the log fort at Lake Simcoe."

The road was destined to become Yonge street. Bond Lake, where summer picnickers foregather, is named after Sergeant Bond, a Ranger who took part in that operation, and who later settled on land hard by.

Among the historical relics presented to Toronto through the generosity of Frederick B. Robins, are the swords of Col. John Graves Simcoe, as worn by him when in command of the Queen's Rangers.

Floating Gardens.

In old-time Mexico and in Kashmir there were real floating gardens.

Mexico City is surrounded by a lake crossed by long causeways built in the time of the Aztecs. As the city was too small for gardens the Aztecs made great rafts of wood and wickerwork, 100 yards long and more, and filled them with a couple of feet of soil. Trees were planted on these floating gardens, to give shade, and huts were built for the gardeners.

Some were vegetable gardens and others grew beautiful blossoms for the emperor and to adorn the temples of the sun. It was easy to bring the vegetable produce to market—you just punted the garden in from the lake and sold the stuff to passers-by on the quay.

The low-lying ground around the city of Kashmir is liable to floods each rainy season; the vegetable gardens are made so that they rise on the flood, on the same plan as those of ancient Mexico. During the dry weather the floating gardens are run aground, on the beach or on a shoal. You would not suspect, from a glance, that they were anything out of the common.

But when the torrential downpour comes and the water rises, lo and behold; the gardens rise with it, and cruise gently hither and thither until a convenient anchorage has been found. Then stout poles are rammed into the bottom and the gardens are moored until fine weather comes again.

Joke Was on the King.

The late King Christian of Denmark was what might be termed a good sport. He once plunged in and saved a sailor from drowning. Not long ago before his death he was cruising in his yacht off the Danish coast when he was startled by the sound of fire arms. He ordered the yacht to turn at full speed in the direction of the sound and soon came within range of a fearful spectacle. From the deck of a steamer some men were firing on a rowing-boat, and as the Rita came near a girl threw herself from the boat into the water. A motor launch was lowered from the yacht, and the drowning girl was hauled aboard this by the king himself. His majesty then noted a boat with a huge camera, and found that he had been acting for the benefit of a cinematograph operator. Although annoyed the king saw the humor of the situation, and gave permission for the film to be exhibited.

FAMOUS WHEAT FARMER

AWARDED CHAMPIONSHIP AT THE CHICAGO GRAIN SHOW.

Young English Major Went West on Account of Pulmonary Weakness Caused by Gas Poisoning Makes Rapid Strides at Farming In Alberta.

Coming to Alberta to be cured of pulmonary weakness, caused by gas during the Great War, a young Englishman, in a little more than three years has become the most famous farmer in Western Canada—the grower of the world's best wheat. To make such distinction the more impressive, it may be added that before settling in Alberta in 1920, he had no previous experience in agriculture.

The young man is Major H. G. L. Strange, M.C., owner and operator at Fenndale Farm, Fenn, Alberta, and the achievement which won him fame almost overnight was the awarding to his Marquis wheat seed the grand championship at the recent International Grain Show at Chicago. Since he won first place in the wheat competition and in all, fifteen of the twenty-five prizes in this class, he was hardly challenged for the grand championship.

Major Strange's sweeping victory was all the more agreeable to his adopted province because Alberta had not previously captured the premier award in wheat, this prize going invariably to Saskatchewan. In fact, Alberta unostentatiously assumed that Saskatchewan's wheat seed was superior to that grown in Alberta and derived a compensating solace from the fact that this province took the first prizes for oats seed, which performance, by the way, it repeated this year, with J. W. Biglands, of Lacombe, in first place and Joseph Smith, of Wolf Creek, another Albertan, in second.

Alberta farmers could hardly realize that a gas engineer, for such is Major Strange's profession, could accomplish such sensational results in a scant four seasons' farming but he did more than that. Starting in 1920, he began showing seed at the Chicago exhibition the next year and in the face of the keenest competition he won third prize for his Marquis wheat, second for his Victory oats, fourth for his peas and seventh for his barley.

Only exhibitors at Chicago can realize fully what a feather it is in a farmer's cap to win these places in four distinct competitions. How much more remarkable is it that Major Strange should win them in his second year's operations, more especially in view of the fact that he had no previous experience in agrarian pursuits?

In 1922, he won eighth place with his wheat, third with peas and fifth with barley.

Then in 1923, he won the outstanding honors of the whole show.

Naturally the question is asked,—How did Major Strange so quickly become an expert farmer with an international standing?

The answer is that he started right and continued as he started.

When he went to Alberta in 1920, he had no definite intention of locating in there but after a careful investigation, involving tests of soils and examination of weather records, he decided that here was an extremely fertile field if the proper methods were employed.

His next step was to consult the Federal and Provincial experts on agriculture. Principally he gained knowledge from the field husbandry department of the University of Alberta. His researches convinced him that success lay in growing registered seed and having bought about 1,000 acres at Fenn, he put this conviction into effect with what results his victories at Chicago indicate.

From the outset he used registered seed only and he bent every effort to improve it. In 1922, for example, he imported from France what is reputed to be the finest seed cleaning machine in the world.

Major Strange does not confine his attention to grain. He is an enthusiastic advocate of the "Large Black" hogs as the best bacon type and he imported a pen of these from England to give him a start.

He is even more enthusiastic about poultry and it is his ambition to have the highest laying flock of Barred Rocks on the American continent.

These four short years in Alberta have brought him quick honors from his fellow farmers for already he is president of the Alberta Seed Growers Association, director of the Canadian Seed Grocers' Association, member of the Dominion Government's Advisory Seed Board and secretary of the Alberta Record of Performances Poultry Breeders' Association.

This is his career? By profession he is, as mentioned, a gas engineer. He was trained at Sir W. G. Armstrong, Whitworth and Company, Manchester, England. He has to his credit three years' military service in the South African War. For ten years he was general manager of the Honolulu Gas Company, Honolulu, Hawaii.

He saw four years' service in France during the world war in the Imperial Royal Engineers, serving with the Poison Gas Offensive Corps. He was thrice wounded, was awarded the Military Cross and was mentioned in despatches twice. He also saw special service with the Grand Fleet and the Royal Flying Corps.

Talk Is Cheap.

The talkative man who had a penchant for statistics, was discoursing to his neighbor on a Toronto street car on the amount of money spent in race track gambling.

"Listen," he said, "if all the money that was bet on the Zev-In Memoriam race were ours to divide, what would we get?"

"Properly intoxicated," replied his bored neighbor.

Tuberculosis and Dairying.

The economic importance of tuberculosis in the dairy industry is shown by figures on the length of time cows remain in the milking herd. The figures, prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture, show that the average cow remains in the milking herd 4.2 years. However, when the cows removed on account of tuberculosis are not considered, it is found that the turnover is not nearly so great, the useful life of the average cow being 5.7 years. The eradication of the great cattle plague will cut down the costs of production of dairy products.

BEFORE MY BABY CAME

I Was Greatly Benefited by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Sydenham, Ont.—"I took your medicine before my baby was born, and it was a great help to me as I was very poorly until I had started to take it. I just felt as though I was tired out all the time and would have weak, faint spells. My nerves would bother me until I could get little rest, night or day. I was told by a friend to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I only took a few bottles and it helped me wonderfully. I would recommend it to any woman. I am doing what I can to recommend this good medicine. I will lend that little book you sent me to any one I can help. You can with the greatest of pleasure use my name in regard to the Vegetable Compound if it will help others take it."—Mrs. HARVEY MILLIGAN, Sydenham, Ont.

It is remarkable how many cases have been reported similar to this one. Many women are poorly at such times and get into a weakened, run-down condition, when it is essential to the mother, as well as the child, that her strength be kept up.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is an excellent tonic for the mother at this time. It is prepared from medicinal roots and herbs, and does not contain any harmful drugs. It may be taken in safety by the nursing mother.

BUFFALO ARE INCREASING.

Canada's Wild Wood Bison Roam Near Athabasca.

Have you tried a piece of buffalo meat? Like good beef but gamier, and mostly lacking fat, the flesh of the bison makes a pleasant change in one's fare. White hunters on the plains used to live for weeks on end upon a diet of straight buffalo meat and tea in the wild old days when bread and vegetables were unknown among the Indians. The meat from the Dominion Government's park at Wainwright, Alberta, is not the first buffalo flesh to be sold in Toronto. Back in the sixties and seventies when vast herds covered the western plains of the United States and when almost every farmer in Ontario boasted a buffalo robe which he had bought for $1, meat used to find its way to Toronto via Chicago, says the Toronto Telegram.

To provide the feast for Toronto and other places and incidentally to kill off superfluous animals in the big herd at Wainwright, it seems that 1,847 buffalo were slaughtered last winter. So, as the herd was said to number some 8,300 head last summer, Canada still has more than 6,000 of the animals at Wainwright. The park embraces 162 square miles of rolling sandy prairie, dotted with clumps of poplar and little lakes and though the soil is unsuitable for farming, it makes an admirable range for buffalo under natural conditions. Into this space, which is enclosed by woven wire fence ten feet high, were turned the less than 800 animals forming the nucleus of the present herd.

The Government which started off, hoping merely to preserve an almost extinct race of animals, now finds itself permanently in the butcher business—though it lets out the actual work of slaughter and sale to others.

To-day there are, counting the 3,753 buffalo in various parts of the United States, the more than 6,000 at Wainwright, a few at Banff and one or two other places, not forgetting Toronto, plus the estimated 1,000 head of wild wood buffalo near Fort Smith, N.W.T., on the Slave and Peace River range, nearly 11,000 head in North America. There is, indeed, some admixture of domestic cattle blood, but the pure bison strain predominates.

Much mystery enshrouds the wild herd of wood buffalo on the Peace River. Their sanctuary is a wild, rolling country quite uninhabited, forested with black spruce and poplar, and interspersed with grassy meadows. The Mounted Police who keep an eye on them, have very vague ideas of the size of the herd, which is kept from over-increase by the wolves. Though it is an offence to shoot one, there is little doubt that Indians occasionally pick out a choice animal. The wood buffalo, much larger than his brother of the plains is the biggest animal on the continent. Some think him a breed by himself, but others incline to the theory that the herd originated from plain buffalos driven north by hunters and that his change in size and color is due to evolution.

Racial Origins in Canada.

The census shows that 4,869,000 people in Canada are of British origin, divided as follows: English, 2,545,496; Irish, 1,107,817; Scottish, 1,173,824; others, 41,953. The population of French origin is 2,452,782, a little less than the English. After that comes 66 different races. The fear is sometimes expressed that Canada is being overrun with foreigners, but this notion is exaggerated. There is safety in the fact that the foreigners are divided into so many different classes. Persons of one particular race may "herd together," but foreigners of all kinds do not find any such bond of union. The largest single group is German, with 294,636 people, a very small percentage of the whole population, and next come Hebrews, 126,196; Ukrainians, 106,721, and Russians, 100,764. A person of British origin entering a district where many foreigners live and noting their peculiar accents and customs obtains a false impression that they are all banded together and may become a menace to the community, forgetting that they come from a continent whose inhabitants are in many cases deadly enemies. Reasonable precautions should be taken against too large a volume of foreign immigration, but the figures show that up tothe time of the taking of the last census there was no cause for alarm.—Toronto Globe.

WHEN HORSES EAT HAY

Do Not Feed Them Too Much or Too Long.

Mastication a Slow Process — Digestion Described—Oats and Hay Do Not Mix in the Stomach — Feed Grain Early to Skimmilk Calves.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture. Toronto.)

A horse should not be given more feed than he will consume in one hour and a half or two hours. It is a wasteful and harmful practice to keep hay before horses all the time. The horse should have sufficient to satisfy hunger, and, if his teeth are in good condition, two hours of undisturbed feeding morning and night, with an hour and a half at noon, will put as much food into his stomach and intestine as these organs can properly take care of.

Mastication a Slow Process With Horses.

Mastication in the horse is a slow process. It takes fifteen to twenty minutes to properly chew and swallow a pound of hay, and from five to ten minutes with a pound of oats. The salivary secretion during feeding with an average horse ranges from 8½ to 10½ pints per hour. This secretion makes it possible for the horse to properly masticate and swallow the food, each pound of hay mixing with four times its bulk of saliva, and each pound of oats with an equal weight. After mastication, the bolus of food passes to the stomach and lies in the lesser curvature until there is sufficient accumulation to distend the organ and press the material to the greater curvature, where gastric juice begins to act on it.

Work of Digestion Described.

As the stomach distends through food being pressed in, the ingesta (food on which the gastric juices are acting) is forced out through the pylorus into the intestines, where the gastric juices have full opportunity of acting. If the quantity fed is not more than what the horse can eat in two hours, the stomach and intestines can accommodate it for full and proper digestion. If the quantity of hay and oats is such as to keep the horse eating continuously (most horses are gluttons), feed will be forced through the stomach and intestines too quickly to permit of proper and full saturation with gastric juice, hence the wasteful practice of having hay before the horse all the time when he is standing in the stable. There is no absorption from the stomach of the horse, this function being performed by the intestines. Under normal conditions and rational feeding the food remains in the horse's stomach long enough for the gastric juices to convert 40 to 50% of the carbohydrates into sugar, and from 40 to 70% of the proteins into peptones. Overeating, which causes overloading of stomach and duodenum, is just about as sensible as choking the threshing machine and causing general waste, sending the grain out with the straw.

Oats and Hay Do Not Mix in the Stomach.

If a horse is fed on oats and hay in succession, the stomach will, on examination, be found to contain these substances unmixed and arranged in strata, the first food taken being in the pylorus and the last in the lesser curvature. The contents of a horse's stomach are squeezed and pressed, but not churned, as is the case with cattle.

The regular arrangement of food in layers is disturbed when a horse is watered after feeding. A portion of the food may be washed out of the stomach. The water which a horse drinks doer not stop in the stomach but passes directly through it on its way to the caecum. For this reason it is advisable to water first and feed afterwards.—L. Stevenson, Dept. of Extension, O. A. College, Guelph.

Feed Grain Early to Skimmilk Calves.

At the time calves are changed from whole to skimmilk they are ready to begin eating small amounts of grain, which should be placed before them in small feeding boxes. Or if they are tied in stanchions for milk feeding, the grain can be put in the manger before they are released. Just a very small handful is all the calf will take at first, and only as much should be fed as the animal will clean up.

Ground corn is very palatable, and it can be fed alone or in combination with other grains, such as ground oats, bran, and some oil meal. It sometimes helps to get the calf started on grain by putting a small amount on its tongue and muzzle when the empty milk pail is taken away. This also puts a stop to sucking the ears of the calf in the next tie. After the young animal's appetite for grain has increased, the corn and oats can be fed whole, but many feeders continue to let them have ground grain.

A good grain mixture to feed to growing calves is made up of 500 pounds of ground corn, 300 pounds ground or whole oats, and 100 pounds lindseed oil meal.

Hay can also be placed before the calves at this time in a small rack. Clover hay, mixed clover and timothy, or alfalfa hay not too leafy, are as satisfactory.

An early start in grain and hay ensures the proper development of the digestive organs of the young animal, and assists in promoting vigorous growth.

Pack Up Your Dishes.

(A Song for Girls' Clubs.)

Pack up your dishes in the old dish pan
And wash, wash, wash.
While we've got soap and water near at hand,
Scrub, girls, use the brush,
What's the use of leaving them?
To grumble is all bosh.
So pack up your dishes in the old dish pan,
And wash, wash, wash.

Accidents In Ontario.

There were 61,316 accidents reported to the Ontario Workmen's Compensation Board during 1923, 879 of them being fatal, as against a total of 50,411 during 1922, of which 418 were fatal. While there were over 10,000 more accidents reported during 1923 than in 1922, the increase was in those of a minor nature. The largest previous yearly record of accidents was in 1920, when the total was 54,851. The total benefits awarded during 1923 amounted to $6,173,761.74, as against $5,692,896.61 in 1922, and $6,189,263.49 in 1921.

Wants to Be Serious

Ben Turpin, famous comedian, inset, and the Ste. Anne Basilica now in course of erection.

YES! Ben Turpin is permanently cross-eyed, though his feet are not the monstrosities they appear when made up for the screen. Quebecers who discovered this when he and Mrs. Turpin stayed at the Chateau Frontenac recently were also surprised to find them a most retiring, modest, quietly dressed and devoted couple, quite unlike the movie people one imagines.

The manner in which Mr. Turpin has risen supremely over the handicap of those famous eyes is an example of the courageous turning of an impediment to good account. "I love serious acting," said Mr. Turpin when interviewed on the Canadian Pacific en route to Montreal, "and long to play tragic roles, but, of course, I haven't the looks. So I do the next best thing—I make people laugh. Moreover, it's a pretty hard job being funny all the time. Often I feel more like crying. But I've got to make 'em laugh or my head will be chopped off."

Ben is an American of old stock but Mrs. Turpin is a French Canadian. Hence this was not by any means the first visit of the comedian and his wife to Quebec, but the trip on this recent occasion was somewhat in the nature of a pilgrimage from Los Angeles to the Shrine of Ste. Anne de Beaupre.

Ste. Anne de Beaupre will again this year, be the Mecca of thousands of pilgrimages. The new Basilica, work on which is being hurried as much as possible will not be ready for occupation for some two or three years yet, but the little wooden church which, since fire destroyed the old Basilica, has housed the shrine, is serving a useful purpose and this summer will no doubt see many sticks and crutches added to the pile within its doors.
